UNIFORMITY OF FOOD GRADES AND STANDARDS.

The plan of establishing uniform food laws, in the forty-eight states of this country, that shall be in harmony with the Federal Food and Drugs Act, is no nearer realization than it was in 1906 when the pure food law was enacted. Those states which have a stronger food law than the national law would object to lowering their law to the standard of the Federal law, while on the other hand those states which have an incomplete food law would likewise object to changing it. Efforts to establish this uniform law are about as unsatisfactory as those made to establish uniform divorce laws, or to merge all the churches of a town into one church. "If uniformity means a law in conformity with the law that I approve of then I am in favor of uniformity," each man will say, but if asked to accept the laws of another state, or the beliefs of another church, he will decline to accede to any change. This is the principal reason why the long talked of uniformity in state food laws will have to be abandoned. Will North Dakota lower its standard to that of the Federal law? For this reason the only way open to progressive food officials and manufacturers of food products, by which uniformity in food labels can be secured, is through the establishing of food standards and grades. This is one of the objects for which the American Pure Food League is pledged to work.

The work for food standards was first begun in England by the Society of Public Analysts about 1870; from there it extended to Bavaria, where in 1885 the Bavarian Association of Food Chemists commenced a set of food standards for that country; Austria next followed and prepared a set of standards more elaborate than had been prepared. Still later the Imperial Bureau of Health of Germany took up the work which finally extended into Switzerland and Italy. The first food standards promulgated in this country were the result of work done by the Association of Official Food Chemists. The Secretary of Agriculture in 1902 proclaimed the standards adopted by the association as the food standards for this country. Later, through the influence of trade interests, these standards were supposed to have been set aside, but they have been the only basis for the enforcement of the food law that has been available and they have been used constantly in determining what constitutes an adulteration of a food product. It stands to reason that there must be a standard else there can be no violation of that standard any more than there could be counterfeit money unless there was a real money as a standard, or a false weight, unless there was a true weight. The work for food standards has taken on fresh life of late. At the annual meeting of food officials, held at Berkeley, Cal., in August the report was read of what had been done during the past year by the Joint Standards Commission which is forming definitions and standards, for all food products; these definitions will be the basis, after this, for all suits brought for violation of the pure food law. Dr. Ladd, State Food and Drug Commissioner, of North Dakota, in giving the report of the work done, stated that he was convinced that, through the establishing of definitions and standards for food products, it would be possible to secure a uniformity of procedure under state laws that would be impossible through an attempt to unify state food laws.

In addition to standards and definitions for foods, it is also planned to establish grades for the same foods "taking note especially of those classifications which have been approved by commercial practice." The American Pure Food League believes that these grades should be established on a basis of food value first, then of cleanliness and freedom from adulteration. There is more danger to the consumer's health in eating macaroni made by a typhoid carrier or commercially handled by infected hands or cooked by a diseased cook than there is from eating macaroni made from a low grade wheat. Yet unless there is a standard for macaroni, a definition of what macaroni is, the manufacturer of real macaroni, made from semolina, suffers by having his product placed in unfair competition with the manufacturer of a macaroni made from a low grade soft wheat. The standard set for macaroni and other alimentary pastes defines them as being made from the semolina of hard wheat. Semolina corresponds to the nutritious middlings of flour, and is a coarse granular product of the hard macaroni wheat. This kind of wheat is now grown extensively in some of the western wheat states and makes a macaroni equal to that imported from Italy. What is to hinder this country from producing all of its macaroni? Let the standards and grades of macaroni become familiar to the consumer and the educated buyer will demand the best. But a product made from flour is not a true macaroni, but an imitation according to the new standards. Almost any consumer can test for himself the quality of the macaroni when eating it. If it dissolves when cooked and comes to the table in a pasty form then one may know that it is not made from semolina but from flour. Now why should not the label inform the buyer as to the grade of the product? If it is an imitation macaroni let the label say so. It was said before the pure food law was passed that a manufacturer would need thirty-three different kind of labels in order to ship his product into thirty-three states. If now uniform standards are recognized by food officials and manufacturers only one set of labels will be required. If foods are standardized and graded then the consumer will have something definite to study and one may quickly acquire the knowledge as to what grades and standards imply.

The confusion the consumer experiences in selecting foods arises largely because of ignorance of what labels mean, and at present they mean very little. If, however, the plan succeeds to grade foods then the labels will mean something. The grading of foods will lead also to more sensible buying on the part of the consumer, for he will know he is paying for what he selects. The grading of milk is a case in point. Grade A milk means that the milk has been produced from tuberculin tested cows, and conforms to a certain standard of cleanliness as determined by bacteriological test. The consumer in selecting grade A milk knows what he is buying. If he orders grade B milk he again knows what he is buying, and knows that it is milk of a lower grade than grade A. It is not possible for everyone to buy the best grades of food, but it is possible for everyone to know what he is buying if the plan to grade and label all food for just what it is worth can be perfected.

It is because the use of artificial colors lends a false value to foods that their use is prohibited in all states where care is exercised over the food supply. One of the most unnecessary uses of colors is in the case of maraschino cherries. These cherries are first bleached with sulphites to remove whatever color they have; the stone is taken out and the cherry is then soaked in glucose, which has the effect of swelling it to its usual size (glucose swells the foods to which it is added, while sugar shrinks them); the cherry is then colored with an aniline dye and is ready for the uneducated palate of the uneducated consumer who thinks he is eating a red cherry or a green one, according to which dye was used to give it the unnatural shade. The label on the bottle in which the cherries are sold contains the word "artificially colored," but the consumer rarely sees the bottle, and more rarely reads the label.

The manufacturer contends that the use of these labels tends to make the food more attractive, just as the savage believes that hanging a ring through the nose of the woman makes her more beautiful. While the colors may make the foods attractive to some eyes, as the ring through the nose also does, yet the chief reason for the prohibition of colors lies in the fact that they do cover up and conceal inferiority. By bleaching his flour the miller was enabled to use a lower grade of wheat than he was when he did not bleach his product. By polishing his coffee the dealer in green coffee gave, as he thought, a better appearance to his coffee of inferior grade, while the dealer in rice by coating his product with glucose and talc supposed that he too would conceal the fact that his rice was of an inferior grade.....

The firm manufacturing goods under the best sanitary conditions is more entitled to brand its goods Grade A than the man who is making foods in a dirty factory and employing workmen who are unclean or ill. The health crusade, which is but now beginning under the flag of the pure food law is bound to be one of the most important movements ever known. Dr. Barnard, State Food and Drug Commissioner of Indiana, in a memorable paper read at the meeting of food officials at Berkeley, to which reference has already been made, stated that the greatest problem facing the food official today was not that of moulds or preservatives but that of protection of the consumer against contamination with the germs of disease which may be planted there by workmen. "When we realize how few years we have been regarding health as an essential to employment and sum up the results of our crusade, we find we have really gone far."

The pure food law, during the three years that preceded its passage and during the nine years that have followed its enactment, has been a factor in educating the public on the food question. The "safety first" slogan has quickened the interest of the consumer in the quality of the food served to him. With food standards established and all foods graded a new light will come to the intelligent consumer.—Alice Lakey, Executive Secretary, American Pure Food League, in the Osteopathic Magazine.

ORIGIN OF THE BUTTERMILK CULT.

From the Washington Star.

Many signs point to the existence of a buttermilk cult, a more sensible practice than most of those things which are called cults and fashions. No dairy lunch seems now to be able to do business without the aid of buttermilk, and it is being served in drug stores and in barrooms. Though the virtues and palatability of buttermilk have been known for ages, it is now being honored with the appreciation of more patrons than ever before. The buttermilk renaissance set in when the statement gained wide currency that sour milk was an aid to longevity. No doubt a great many persons were led to tasting buttermilk through reasons of vanity, but finding it good have got the habit. Every now and then there is a statement from some man of medicine that certain poisonous germs in our stomachs are destroyed by buttermilk and that perhaps the human family would be better off if it drank more buttermilk and sweet milk and less of many other beverages recommended as thirst quenchers.

It has been written that from immemorial days curdled milk in various forms has not only been a favorite article of diet among pastoral peoples but has been credited with medicinal properties. Sour milk figured conspicuously in the Aryan system of medicine and medical historians saw that that system antedated by centuries the theories and practices of Hippocrates, and by some writers it is maintained that Hippocrates acquired much of his medical wisdom either in the land of the Ayrans or from members of that great division of the human family.

Milk was known to possess remarkable therapeutic properties and it was prescribed fresh and in the form of curds and whey. It was highly recommended by ancient physicians in the case of intestinal disorders, and somewhat different remedial qualities were ascribed to the milk of the cow, buffalo, goat, sheep, elephant, ass, and camel.

Pasteur made researches into the nature of fermentation, and it is said that the facts which he observed laid the foundation of biochemistry and bacteriology. He established what was then new, but what is now universally admitted, that in the matter of sour milk the chemical changes were effected by micro-organisms, which cause the souring of milk by converting lactose or milk sugar into lactic acid, and produce analogous changes in other sugar-containing fluids.

What has come to be called the lactic acid theory was a step toward combatting harmful bacteria with bacteria which in themselves were harmless and which were the natural enemies of the harmful bacteria.

Professor Metchiikoff, observing the high number of cases of long life among the peasantry of Bulgaria, made an investigation into their habits of living and, of course, among other things, found that they led a simple life and that an important article of their diet was curdled milk. In making a careful bacteriological analysis of this food three acid-forming organisms were isolated and one of these, established to be the most active of the three was named bacillus bulgaricus. Of this organism it has been written that it acted in counteracting the putrefactive changes set up in food products by other bacteria inhabiting the intestines. This result or decision was reached at the Pasteur Institute in Paris. The theory was reached that acid-forming organisms have the property of arresting the growth and activity of putrefactive alkaline ones, which cause a secondary fermentation with the production of poisonous changes especially in the large intestine and are absorbed.

The cleansing quality of sour milk is quite generally believed and there has come to be a very large demand for buttermilk. It is worth noting that the buttermilk of commerce, the kind that a man gets when he walks up to a counter, is not "buttermilk," but "butterless" milk," or skimmed milk which has been turned sour after the butterfat has been removed by a separator.

In the old days in the country and to some extent in the country today, when the housewife or the maid churned butter not every bit of butterfat was removed. A good deal remained in the sour milk, and it was really buttermilk. Very little buttermilk of that kind is to be met with today, except in those families which still churn butter in the old way.

GREAT FOOD VALUE OF CHEESE.

There can be no doubt that the time has come for a great development of cheese making in this country, says the Milk Reporter. Even without the war we should have been forced to make more and better cheese for the simple reason that we must have it as a substitute for meat. It is safe to say we will never have any more cheap meat. Good management may moderate the present upward tendency of meat prices, but it can never bring back the unlimited grazing space of a sparsely settled country. In the absence of cheap meat we must use more cheese as foreigners do. This will be no hardship when we learn how to do it. It will no doubt be a relief to the cook and an excellent thing for our health.

When we realize the possibilities of cheese we shall cease to lament the passing of the cattle ranch. Cheese can be served in hundreds of different ways, any one of them easier than the preparation of meats. It is also much easier to keep, both in the home and in the market.

At present the quantity of cheese eaten in the United States, while large in the aggregate, is almost negligible when compared with other food products of less food value and palatability. While it has been a staple food with many races for uncounted years, there is a general tendency in this country to regard it as an accessory to the diet, useful more for its flavor than for its real food value. It has also been thought to be indigestible and constipating.

SYSTEMS OF BUYING MILK.

A few years ago by far the larger proportion of milk handled by city dealers was bought from the producer on the basis of the measure; that is, the can and the gallon, remarks the Creamery and Milk Plant Monthly. Dealers as well as producers have come to recognize the inaccuracy of this system and its unfairness, both to themselves and to the farmers, so that in recent years the tendency has been to abandon it and to adopt systems that are more nearly equitable and at the same time practicable.

Among the systems now commonly used are the following:

1. By the quart or gallon.
2. By the can, the size of the can varying from eight and one-half to forty quarts and more.
3. By the can; the can of milk must come up to the standard weight.
4. By the can or the gallon, with a minimum standard for butterfat, with a definite premium per gallon for each one-tenth per cent. butterfat above standard.
5. By the gallon, the number of gallons being determined by dividing the weight by 8.6.
6. By weight, which is determined by the number of cans, each can being supposed to hold a certain quantity of milk by weight.
7. By weight, the milk being weighed at receiving stations or at city plant.
8. Same as No. 4, with minimum standard for dairy farm score, and premium for extra points in this score.
9. A certain price for a pound of butterfat and for 100 pounds of skimmed milk.
10. Same as No. 9, only the weight of the whole milk is considered instead of the skimmed milk.
11. On the weight basis, with a minimum standard for butterfat and premium for extra points. Sometimes the butterfat standard established and deductions made for each one-tenth per cent. above it. In some cases the premium is paid only for milk of three-tenths per cent. or more above the standard, while the deductions begin at one-tenth per cent. below.
12. A certain price per 100 pounds, depending upon the amount of butterfat, allowing 3 cents per one-tenth per cent. of butterfat above or below the base price for the month for 100 pounds in summer and four cents in winter. (Base price for each month is from the average per cents. of butterfat contained in the milk for those months for a period of years.) Milk below 2.8 per cent. butterfat is paid for on the basis of sweet cream fat. Deduction is made for solids not fat below 8.5 per cent.

13. A certain price per point butterfat per gallon.

14. Grading of milk and paying from three to four cents butterfat per 100 pounds for B grade; grades to be determined by (1) bacterial content of the milk. (2) sediment test; (3) acidity, (4) flavor and odor; and (5) temperature on arrival in city. For grade A milk a premium of five cents per 100 pounds is added; for grade C milk a reduction of five cents per 100 pounds is made from grade B prices. Should milk from producer grade C for two successive months the dealer may cancel the contract.

In some cases in which milk is bought on the basis of the dairy score the farmer is allowed to score his own dairy.

When special milks are desired, other requirements are often made of the farmers, and they are paid in proportion. For example, the tuberculin test is sometimes required.

When milk is bought by weight it is necessary, from time to time, to test the scales used in weighing it.

There is no doubt that milk should be bought as much as possible upon the basis of quality. The farmer who sells clean milk should get more than one whose milk is dirty, and it is seldom questioned that the weight and butterfat systems of buying are the proper ones. Of course it takes time to establish a new system of buying in any locality. The farmers are accustomed to the old system and are often loath to take up with new systems, although clearly to their advantage. Dealers, however, are working more and more in this direction and the time seems to be approaching when all milk will be paid for on more uniform and equitable bases.

SPECIAL MILK.

The Dairy Division of the United States Department of Agriculture has issued the following bulletin:

In many cities there is a tendency to grade milk and sell it to the consumer upon its merits. Such a system is most desirable as it enables dairymen who handle only a high grade product to obtain recognition for their care. It also enables consumers to choose their supply on the absolute merits of the various grades. This is a sound commercial feature and one that is already recognized in nearly all other industries. The purchaser of dry goods does not expect to buy silk at calico prices.

At the present time there are on the market numerous brands of special milk. The average consumer has only a hazy idea as to just what is meant by a special milk, but usually considers it to be in some way superior to the ordinary milk dispensed. Some milk dealers have considered that milk a little richer in fat should constitute special milk, while others have adhered to the principle that such a grade should be cleaner and safer than the ordinary supply. Sometimes this confusion has resulted in the marking of special milks which were not superior, from a health point of view, to ordinary grades. It has happened that dealers, ordinarily were unable satisfactorily to explain to their customers, the difference between the ordinary grade and the special. Whenever such a condition arises it is a serious setback to the development of markets for a legitimate grade of special milk.

A special milk may or may not be richer in fat than ordinary grades, but it certainly should be produced and handled in such manner as to be cleaner and safer than the ordinary grades handled by the individual dealer or his competitors. In this way public confidence can be maintained and an increased price warranted. Dairymen are learning that it is good business to stand squarely behind their goods and to see that all claims are fully substantiated.

If a special milk is to be sold as such its standard should be high and permanent, so as to result in increased confidence, and increased demand from consumers. There is hardly any better way to increase demand than to produce and maintain a high grade and if this grade is to be termed "Special" by all means let it be as safe as possible, from a health point of view and not a mere trade name. Business depends upon the demand, demand upon quality and quality upon the inclination of the man behind, and the standard he wishes to set for his product. If special milk is to be included it must be his best effort along his chosen line of endeavor and to this end every milk dealer should be able and willing to set up and maintain a high standard. At present in most cities only a very small amount of special milk is handled, although it seems that the trade demands should warrant the sale of a very much larger amount.

THE FARMER AS A BUSINESS MAN.

The past decade has worked almost a miracle in the business world. Different standards of business etiquette prevail. Questionable methods that a few years ago were excused because they were employed in the name of business are no longer tolerated. Legislation has had much to do with this changed condition and education has had perhaps more to do with it.

The farmer is not behind the procession either. He is a far better business man than he was twenty years ago. Perhaps the fact that he is not isolated like he was then has had much to do with it. At any rate it is safe to say that the merchant in any line of trade who sells to the farmer has a different customer to deal with than he had in the days gone by.

Above all things the man who is doing a successful business with farmers has learned he must have the farmers' confidence. He can't play "skin games" on him and expect that the farmer is so innocent of business that he is not going to find it out. The man or firm in the town or in the city that has this to learn will wake up some day to learn that the confidence of the farmer is not to be trifled with.

Business is coming to be more and more a matter of confidence and the best way to build up confidence is to play a fair, square game.

The farmer has often been pointed out as a man who always wanted the best of the bargain. He was played upon continually by tricksters with plausible stories and after he had been "most beautifully" trimmed he retaliated in the only way at his command. He has learned to fight shy of these skimmers and in consequence has learned to look upon legitimate business through differently colored goggles. Education and improved social life has made of him more of a business man in the true sense of the term.—Blue Valley Bulletin.

WHY FISH SHOULD BE "PARAMOUNT" FOOD.

There are three good reasons why fish should be the great food. First, health demands it; second, it is the most economical, and third, it is the sole great natural food product of that section of the country, and the interests of New England industries require it.

That fish is one of the healthiest of edibles all authorities seem agreed. Stomachs which cannot assimilate meats, fruits and coarse grains can digest sea food easily, and for invalids and convalescents fish is frequently prescribed. Although the old theory that fish made brains has passed, with many other similar theories, into the fancies of a past age, there is no doubt that fish is good for the stomach and every internal organ.

Meats are difficult of digestion; fruits are acid; and grains are unsuitable for continuous diet, while fish is easily digested, free from acid, and, when properly prepared, is excellent for a continuous, yet varied diet.

It is a simple fact which government officials have often demonstrated that the purchaser of fish gets more nutriment for his or her money than the buyer of any other kind of food. There is little or no waste, and fish contains per ounce, more food value than an equal amount of almost any other food.

Early New England owed its good financial condition largely to the success of its fisheries. The growth of the industry has given rise to other industries. Its fisheries still form one of New England's greatest assets.

THE FOOD VALUE OF MILK.

Good milk is the most valuable single article of diet known to man, while bad, impure, so called "loose milk," is one of the most dangerous foods possible.

In clean, pure, pasteurized milk we have the one perfect food for the human being, and the education of the consumer in the care of milk should go hand in hand with the increased demands made on the milk farmer for a cleaner, higher grade of milk, and on the distributor for greater care in the handling of the product, bringing it to your door clean and not contaminated with any bacteria which would cause disease.

It is a well known fact that the average housewife, living in the town or city knows comparatively nothing about the milk that is supplied to her family.

She knows nothing as to where the milk comes from that is delivered at her door each day, and she knows almost as little about how the milk is cared for, once it has reached her refrigerator.

If the housewife inspects her kitchen and refrigerator each day, she sees in it a bottle of milk; possibly the milk may be in a bowl or a pitcher but the chances are that nine times out of ten, whatever container the milk is in it is uncovered.

The milk is left to absorb every odor from every particle of food in the icebox, which it does greedily as a sponge absorbs water.

If the milk is not in the ice box it may be left in a warm pantry or on the kitchen table uncovered. In the summer time it offers an ideal drinking fountain for the typhoid fly, which is sure to hound the kitchen of the careless housewife.

Or, if the city apartment house is the home, the milk reaches the kitchen by the dumb waiter shaft or the servant elevator after it has been handled by any number of hands, mostly dirty.

At one apartment which I once lived in I was horribly shocked one morning upon opening the dumbwaiter shaft door to find my bottle of cream closely nestled against a garbage can and the contents of many waste baskets from other apartments emptied around it.

This was my first awakening as to the manner in which my milk was delivered to me each morning. I perhaps, had seen it at its worst, but it was the last time I saw it in this condition, for I immediately made other arrangements for the delivery of my milk.

Sometimes it takes a rude awakening to bring us to our senses.

If the tenement house flat is the home it may be left at the door of the poor woman if she can afford to buy bottled milk, where any stray cat or dog can inspect it and then it is opened without washing the outside of the bottle.

The careless handling of a product the most delicate is due to one of two causes—either the housewife is indifferent to the health of her family or she is ignorant as to the effect of such careless handling of milk. One knows that no housewife could be indifferent to the health of her family; hence we must conclude that the careless handling of milk in the home is due to ignorance.

The campaign of education carried on through the recent milk shows has done more to educate the housewife and all other consumers of milk than tons of printed books on the subject.

Of what use is it for the federal government to enforce the pure food law, as it relates to milk, or for the individual state or for the city or the town to enact and enforce at great expense laws for the protection of the milk supply, or for the dairy farmer and distributor of milk to expend large sums of money in producing and delivering a clean, pasteurized, pure supply of milk, when the ignorant and indifferent housewife, by her careless methods in the home nullifies all the work done by the federal, state or municipal authorities and renders useless the time and money spent by the farmer and distributor of milk?

In many a home milk is treated with as little care as a bag of potatoes.

No pains and expense should be spared to educate the consumer of milk; first as to its food value, second as to the danger of contaminated milk from tubercular cattle and third as to its care in the home.—C. P. Smith, in the Milk Dealer.

SOMETHING ABOUT CANNED GOODS AND THEIR PREPARATION.

Readers of the Bulletin will be interested in the following correspondence between Dairy and Food Commissioner James Foust and Frank F. Gorrell, secretary of the National Canners' Association. Mr. Foust defines the purposes and aims of the association, as he understands them, and Mr. Gorrell confirms the accuracy of his convictions. Our observation of the canning business has led to the conclusion that no other organization in the country has done more to better food conditions and to aid food authorities in conserving the welfare of the consumer and in seeing that food products are prepared in accordance with the requirements of state and national law. Its officers and members have set a high standard and all seem to be working toward the same end—the preparation of their products in such a manner as to convince the public that they mean to produce for the general market the best possible brand of canned products.

The fact that the producers of about 75 per cent. of the country's canned goods are members of the National Canners' Association is a very gratifying circumstance to those consumers who are fond of food prepared in this way and who have witnessed the improvement in quality during recent years. The general public would benefit still more if the label of goods manufactured by the National Canners' Association were placed upon every can sent out by its members. The public would thus be enabled to exercise a wise discrimination in the purchase of such products while recent years have witnessed a marked improvement there is still a disposition upon the part of some canners to put up inferior goods and foist it upon the consumer. This was so greatly in vogue a few years ago as to create a wide-spread prejudice against canned food products. It is the hope of many that the National Canners' Association will bring all its influence to bear toward breaking up this business, which, to whatever extent it is practiced, continues to perpetuate prejudice and injure legitimate trade.

This reprehensible practice, whether carried on by a comparatively insignificant number of manufacturers or more largely indulged in, is responsible for the agitation in several state legislatures on behalf of the enactment of laws providing that each container of canned goods should bear a label with the date on which its contents were put up; also that when bottled goods are placed on the market the date shall be blown in the bottle. We are unable to say for how long a period canned fruit and vegetables will keep and remain wholesome and fit for food. This, no doubt, depends upon the condition of the articles when canned as well as upon the sterilizing and the sanitary conditions surrounding or within the establishments where such products are prepared. The Cannery Association, which has done great things already, could take no step that would be more generally popular than the adoption of some method that would prevent the retailing of certain questionable canned goods which could not be sold in any other form.

Following is the correspondence referred to in the opening paragraphs of this article:

George N. Numsen, President, The National Cannery Association, Baltimore, Maryland.

Dear Sir: I am anxious to be enlightened with reference to the objects of the National Cannery Association. I am under the impression that the purpose of your organization is:

1. To elevate and improve the canning industry.
2. To can only products that are sound and wholesome.
3. To employ the best sanitary machinery, surroundings, etc., in canning products.
4. To label all canned products indicating and showing their true composition.
5. To take away from the canning industry all prejudice, if there be any, by giving the people the very best that the market affords.
6. To examine into all tin used in canning food products.
7. To prevent the canning of products that are unwholesome and unfit for food, being due to decomposition, filthy establishments, unsanitary people, or other undesirable surroundings in connection with the plant or products.

Is my understanding of the purpose of your Association correct? If it is, I would also like to know what the membership of the Association is and in what states it exists; and about how many cannerys there are in this country not members of your Association.

May I also ask if it would be feasible for all canned products put up by members of the National Cannery Association to be labeled in connection with the canner's name and address, name of the product, etc., by inserting "Member of the National Cannery Association." What I have in mind is, if products put up by cannerys who belong to your Association are bound under the declaration of principles and rules of your organization to can only pure, sound and wholesome products in sanitary factories, then the members of your Association ought to have encouragement and assistance, and this can only be done by advising the consuming public with the label that they are members of the National Cannery Association.

I am heartily in favor of organizations when they are organized for the purpose of improving food conditions, which I believe is the aim and purpose of the National Cannery Association.

Very truly,

JAMES FOUST,
Commissioner.

National Cannery Association,
1739 H. St., N. W. Washington, D. C.,
February 1, 1916.

Hon. James Foust, Department of Agriculture, New York City.

My dear Mr. Foust: Your letter of January 27th, addressed to President Numsen, has been referred to this office.

Your statement in reference to the purposes of the organization is entirely correct, and we are pleased to know that you have such a full understanding of the aims and accomplishments of the Association.

Regarding the membership, I beg to advise that so far as we can estimate, it represents about 75 per cent. of the entire pack of the country.

Your suggestion in reference to the use of the name of the National Cannery Association on the label is one that has been given considerable thought, and the time will come when its use will be permitted. However, it is felt that there should be a rigid inspection to see that all products bearing this label are fully up to the requirements of the association. This is so largely true at present that some feel that the inspection is unnecessary, but it would not seem fair to let any small exception destroy the reputation of the association of the many responsible cannerys that it represents.

We shall be pleased to have any further suggestions that you may have in mind, for your letter indicates your deep interest in the association, and constructive suggestions in this direction are most welcome.

Thanking you for your letter, I beg to remain,

Very truly yours,

FRANK E. GORRELL,
Secretary.

WORK OF THE DAIRY AND FOOD DIVISION IN 1915.

All past records of the Department of Agriculture are shown to have been broken during 1915 by a report of Dairy and Food Commissioner James Foust, issued at the direction of Secretary of Agriculture Charles E. Patton.

The receipts of the Dairy and Food Division for the past year were $279,055.40 as against $225,910.78 in 1914. This money has been deposited with the State Treasurer for the use of the Commonwealth and is shown to be $193,154.04 in excess of the expenditures, which are provided for by a special appropriation.

During the year the chemists of the Department analyzed 8,939 samples of various food stuffs and there were 1,165 prosecutions. In 1914 there were 4,827 samples analyzed and 1,010 prosecutions.

There was a large increase in the number of oleomargarine licenses during the year, due to the vigilance of the field agents in prosecuting dealers selling without license. The activity of the agents of Commissioner Foust in running down and successfully prosecuting violators of the pure food laws was more marked than ever before, despite the fact that the work of the Dairy and Food Division has had the effect of bringing about a marked improvement in the foods sold in the State in recent years.

In the past nine years the Dairy and Food Division has analyzed 63,510 samples and made 7,706 prosecutions. The receipts have been $1,243,585.26, a total of $532,097.94 in excess of the expenditures.

Violations of the pure food laws found through the analysis of the chemists and for which prosecutions were made in 1915 were as follows: Milk, 625; coffee and chicory, 2; cold storage, 76; eggs, 17; food, 176; ice cream, 41; lard, 8; non-alcoholic drinks, 76; oleomargarine, 16; renovated butter, 2; sausage, 25; vinegar, 101.

The statement for the nine years is as follows:

Year.	Samples analyzed.	Cases terminated.	Receipts.	Expenditures.
1907,	7,400	664	$55,732 63	$78,455 88
1908,	8,300	300	54,580 62	69,968 20
1909,	6,200	797	86,594 15	83,700 00
1910,	5,594	667	110,802 95	79,661 65
1911,	8,200	1,029	120,993 48	83,083 15
1912,	7,204	1,049	136,125 49	81,858 55
1913,	6,846	1,025	173,789 76	75,587 12
1914,	4,827	1,010	225,910 78	73,271 41

IMPROVEMENT IN TOMATO KETCHUP.

Tomato ketchups sold in Pennsylvania have undergone a wonderful improvement in the past twenty years according to a report made public by the Department of Agriculture through Dairy and Food Commissioner James Foust.

Chemists Charles H. LaWall and Leroy Forman, of the department have just concluded the analysis of 142 samples consisting of 135 different brands of ketchup or "catsup" and "catchup," sold in the State. Not one of the samples contained artificial coloring matter and only two of the samples were found to be illegal in any respect. The two samples contained a slight excess of the preservative, sodium benzoate, of which one-tenth of one per cent., is allowed by the law. Only thirty-four of the samples showed the use of sodium benzoate.

In twenty years the percentage of purity, in the sense of freedom from preservatives, has risen from less than six per cent. to over seventy-five per cent. While ninety per cent. of the brands examined twenty years ago contained artificial color, the use of this method of coloration has now entirely disappeared.

The chemists Charles H. La Wall and Leroy Forman declare that not one of the 142 samples examined was found to be of an injurious character from the use of unsound materials which were formerly in common use, and that there is no basis for the allegations that injurious amounts of acids and spices are used in brands containing no sodium benzoate. Only one of the 142 samples examined is noted as having a real tomato flavor, but the report states that factory conditions have improved wonderfully and in most cases ketchups are made from fresh ripe tomatoes.

The report states that the sodium benzoate controversy bids fair to be settled in a most unexpected manner as the European war has been the cause for an increase in the price of that article from less than fifty cents a pound to over $5.00 a pound, and that the cost of sodium benzoate in a pint bottle of ketchup is now nearly as great as the cost of tomatoes present. The chemists believe that manufacturers now using benzoate within the limits of the Pennsylvania law, will soon discard its use on account of the high price of the article.

AN OPEN LETTER TO BOSSY-COW.

From Hoard's Dairyman.

Dear Bossy-Cow: Frankly I owe more to you than I have been able to tell, face to face. There has been so much to do around the farm these summer days, that there has been no opportunity to adequately convey my deep and profound appreciation.

When I took up this old run-down farm, it was a toss-up as to whether I'd make a go of it. A man can't start fighting soil, and hard times, and stump-filled pasture land when he's three-fourths a hospital ward and one-fourth working trim. But, early in the great game, while the surrounding hills were still white with snow and the grate fire in the little front sitting room was the only welcome thing in my world, you came to the farm.

Somehow, affairs changed from the go-off. I took an awful big liking to you, Bossy-Cow. You were a pal,—a companion,—a mild-eyed, quiet, restful friend during those struggling winter days. I guess I couldn't have gotten on without you, Bossy. Remember the opening of the weather-beaten, ramshackle barn door at six, those sharp, cutting a. m.'s? As my eyes grew accustomed to the dim and uncertain light, I could see your big, patient, wondering, grey eyes peering out at me, and I could hear the crunch, crunch of the wet hay in your clean, white mouth and you pawed a wee bit, for you knew from the peck measure under my arm that I came on a mission of good cheer. We fussed around a good deal—you and me,—out there in that big, lonely, neglected barn. How you'd watch me, as with snow banking up against the one small window and powdering in at the door, I set about cleaning up things and patching fragments of harness and trying to make something out of nothing, as is a poor man's way at fighting time.

And finally spring came, Bossy,—spring with the little patch of apple and peach trees doing tolerably well as they sprayed out into big pink and white plumes of fragrant color. And the birds began to nest in the old barn and green splotches showed themselves out yonder in the meadows and pasture land and workin' fields, and God Himself visited us at dawn one fine, clean day, to scatter violets through the dead leaves down by the spring house. Yes,—spring, Bossy, and seeds and hopes were planted, and the soil began to bulge with the wonder of the great miracle of eternal life. We began to put a little money in the bank at the village,—just a penny or so,—but it meant the beginning.

Did you help? Of course you did, Bossy. The extra milk and butter found ready sale. But it did more than that,—your being there at the start. It meant something to talk to and live for, and pet, and love, and fraternize with in the midst of bitter loneliness. It meant a living, breathing thing just across the lot to the barn. And then, after a while, when the woman came, the wife, who was to share that grim and unrelenting burden, both of us loved you in the way that old folks love little children.

Bossy-Cow, do you remember when your baby came into the life of the farm? Do you remember all four of us down the lane in the sunlight, and those unsteady legs of the new-born as it nestled up close to you all white and red-brown and beautiful? Prosperity bloomed with the clover and another spring's dogwood. There were more and more Bossy-cows, and a glistening silo, and a dairy house, and rows and rows of spotless milk cans beneath the cool trees waiting for delivery.

But our memory of you is sweetest as we saw you under the apple trees, knee-deep in fragrant grass, during those long, sleepy, sun-shot, summer afternoons. You busy old muncher, you. A quid of clover makes you happy, doesn't it? And what a maternal expression you wear these days—just as if your work was about over and you had decided to devote your declining days to alfalfa, the choicest ensilage, and the occasional sugar-lumps a certain barefoot boy sneaks from the table for you. It's pretty nice out there under the apple trees. I'll admit—wouldn't mind a loaf myself.

But I'm grateful, Bossy—that's what I started out to say, that's what I wanted you to know. The sight of you nibbling at the clover this morning brought back the earlier, lonlier years when you sort of made it possible for me to keep on-to now. Bossy, you're more than a cow, you're a pal.

New York, W. Livingston Larned.

AN OPINION CONCERNING CATSUP.

Readers of the Bulletin will be interested in the following opinion:

Harrisburg, Pa. November 19, 1915.

Hon. James Foust, Dairy and Food Commissioner, Harrisburg, Pa.

Sir: Your favor of recent date was received. You propound the following question:

"If a box containing two or more dozen bottles of catsup, properly sealed and labeled in conformity with the National Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906, and shipped from another state to a retail merchant in Pennsylvania, is opened and the bottles placed upon the shelves of the store for sale, and upon purchase by an agent of this Department and an analysis, the catsup is found to violate the Pure Food Laws of this State, can the Pennsylvania Laws be enforced?"

With your request you submit a copy of a letter of the State Food and Drug Commissioner of Indianapolis and an opinion of the Attorney General of Indiana, all to the effect that there can be no interference with a grocer who sells to his customer a single bottle of catsup, if it complies with the National Food and Drugs Act, even though it violates the laws of the state, when such bottle of catsup was a part of a shipment from another State and originally packed in a larger case or box.

Your inquiry and the correspondence submitted are the result of a misconstruction of the case of McDermott vs. Wisconsin, 228 U. S. 115, 57 Lawyers Edition 754. The impression prevails since the opinion in that case, that a State cannot enforce its pure food laws against single, sealed packages of food misbranded or adulterated according to state laws, if such single packages comply with the provisions of the National Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906, (34 St. at large, 768, Chapter 3915, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1911, page 1354). This impression is not justified by the decision itself. The precise questions in that case were:

First. Whether the word "package" as used in the Food and Drugs Act was limited to "original package" as understood in interstate commerce, or whether it included the goods upon the shelves of a local merchant for sale.

Second. Whether the Wisconsin law, which required the goods to contain the exclusive labels provided by that statute, and, in effect, prohibited the labels required under the National Food and Drugs Act, was beyond the power of the State to enforce.

The plaintiff in error, a retail merchant in Oregon, Wisconsin, was convicted of violating the Wisconsin statute because he had in his possession with intent to sell and offered for sale, "Karo Corn Syrup" which was not labeled according to the Wisconsin law providing that "the mixture or syrups designated in this section shall have no other designation or brand than herein required," etc. He had purchased from wholesale grocers in Chicago twelve half gallon tin cans of Karo Corn Syrup, the shipment being made in wooden boxes containing the cans, and when the goods were received at the store, the cans were taken from the original boxes and placed on the shelves for sale, at retail. The cans were labeled in accordance with the National Pure Food and Drugs Act. That act provides, as stated in the opinion of McDermott vs. Wisconsin, page 130:

"And as to food, if it shall be labeled or branded so as to deceive or mislead a purchaser, or purport to be a foreign product when not so, or, if the contents of the package as originally put up shall have been removed in whole or in part, and other contents placed in such package; or, if the package fail to bear a statement of the label as required, or, if in package form and the contents are stated in terms of weight or measure, and they are not plainly and correctly stated on the outside of the package; or, if the package containing it or its label contain any design or device regarding the ingredients or the substances contained therein which are false or misleading in character, the food shall be deemed misbranded."

The Court, speaking through Mr. Justice Day, said:

"That the word 'package' or its equivalent expression, as used by Congress in sections 7 and 8 in defining what shall constitute adulteration and what shall constitute misbranding within the meaning of the act, clearly refers to the immediate container of the article which is intended for consumption by the public, there can be no question. And it is sufficient, for the decision of these cases, that we consider the extent of the word 'package' as thus used only, and we therefore have no occasion, and do not attempt, to decide what Congress included in the terms 'original unbroken package' as used in the second and tenth sections, and 'unbroken package' in the third section." With the limitations of its right to regulate interstate commerce, Congress is manifestly aiming at the contents of the package as it shall reach the customer, for whose protection the act was primarily passed, and it is the branding upon the package which contains the article intended for consumption itself which is the subject matter of regulation. Limiting the requirements of the act as to adulteration and misbranding simply to the outside wrapping or box containing the packages intended to be purchased by the consumer, so that the importer, by removing and destroying such covering, could prevent the operation of the law on the imported article yet unsold, would render the act nugatory and its provisions wholly inadequate to accomplish the purposes for which it was passed."

The Court also said, page 135:

"In the view, however, which we take of this case, it is unnecessary to enter upon any extended consideration of the nature and scope of the principles involved in determining what is an original package. For, as we have said, keeping within its Constitutional limitations of authority, Congress may determine for itself the character of the means necessary to make its purpose effectual in preventing the shipment in interstate commerce of articles of a harmful character, and to this end may provide the means of inspection, examination, and seizure necessary to enforce the prohibitions of the act."

And on page 136:

"To determine the time when an article passes out of interstate into state jurisdiction for the purpose of taxation is entirely different from deciding when an article which has violated a Federal prohibition becomes immune. The doctrine (of original package) was not intended to limit the right of Congress, now asserted, to keep the channels of interstate commerce free from the carriage of injurious or fraudulently branded articles, and to choose appropriate means to that end. The legislative means provided in the Federal law for its own enforcement may not be thwarted by state legislation having a direct effect to impair the effectual exercise of such means."

The Court held that Congress could employ the means to keep interstate commerce free from misbranded articles, even to an inspection on the shelves of a retail grocer after the goods had been removed from the "original package," as known in interstate commerce.

The Court also held that a State statute which interfered with such supervisory power over the avenues of commerce was an excessive and illegal exercise of the State's power.

This is the full extent to which the case of McDermott vs. Wisconsin goes.

There is no Pennsylvania pure food statute which excludes, or requires the obliteration of, any labels placed on foods under the United States Food and Drugs Act, nor is there any Pennsylvania statute which interferes with the inspection by the Federal authorities of goods either in original packages, or upon the shelves of retail merchants.

The precise question, then, is whether a Pennsylvania statute may be enforced even if its provisions go farther than the Federal law, but do not interfere with the operation of the Federal statute.

Referring again to the much discussed case of McDermott vs. Wisconsin, it is seen that the Court was careful to say in terms that the regulations of Congress would not prevent enforcement of similar regulations by a State for the protection of its people.

Mr. Justice Day said, page 131:

"While these regulations are within the power of Congress, it by no means follows that the State is not permitted to make regulations, with a view to the protection of its people against fraud or imposition by impure food or drugs. This subject was fully considered by this court in Savage v. Jones, 225 U. S. 501, 56 L. Ed. 1182, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 715, in which the power of the state to make regulations concerning the same subject matter, reasonable in their terms, and not in conflict with the act of Congress, was recognized and stated, and certain regulations of the state of Indiana were held not to be inconsistent with the food and drugs act of Congress."

Again, on pages 133, 134:

"Conceding to the state the authority to make regulations consistent with the Federal law for the further protection of its citizens against impure and misbranded food and drugs, we think to permit such regulation as is embodied in this statute is to permit a state to discredit and burden legitimate Federal regulations of interstate commerce, to destroy rights arising out of the Federal statute which have accrued both to the government and the shipper, and to impair the effect of a Federal law which has been enacted under the Constitutional power of Congress over the subject."

The essence of the decision is found in these words, pages 132-134:

"To require the removal or destruction before the goods are sold of the evidence which Congress has by the food and drugs act, as we shall see, provided may be examined to determine the compliance or non-compliance with the regulations of the Federal law, is beyond the power of the State. The Wisconsin Act which permits the sale of articles subject to the regulations of interstate commerce only upon condition that they contain the exclusive labels required by the statute is an act in excess of its legitimate power."

The question you propound is practically settled by the case of Savage vs. Jones, 225 U. S. 501, 56 L. Ed. 1182.

That was a suit to restrain the State chemist of Indiana from enforcing an act of that state relating to concentrated commercial feeding stuffs. It was alleged that the Indiana Act which required certain labels to be affixed to the package, disclosing in part the ingredients and also required certain stamps purchased from the State chemist should be attached as an inspection fee, interfered with interstate commerce and also because Congress had legislated upon the subject by the National Food and Drugs Act, its jurisdiction was exclusive, and therefore the Indiana Act could not be enforced as to packages received from outside the State and sold by the importing purchaser in the same packages.

The Court held that the Act was not an unconstitutional regulation of interstate commerce, and also, as stated in the syllabus in 56 Law. Ed. 1183, that:

"Congress did not by the passage of the Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906, for the prevention of adulteration and misbranding of foods and drugs when the subject of interstate commerce, preclude the enactment of the Indiana Act prohibiting sales of concentrated commercial feeding stuffs in the original packages, unless there be a compliance as to inspection and analysis and the disclosure of ingredients * * * * * and with its incidental provisions for the filing of a certificate, for registration, and for labels and stamps."

Mr. Justice Hughes, writing the opinion of the Court, said, page 524:

"The State cannot, under cover of exerting its police powers, undertake what amounts essentially to a regulation of interstate commerce, or impose a direct burden upon that commerce." (Citing many authorities).

"But when the local police regulation has real relation to the suitable protection of the people of the State, and is reasonable in its requirements, it is not invalid because it may incidentally affect interstate commerce, provided it does not conflict with legislation enacted by Congress pursuant to its constitutional authority." (Citing many authorities).

And on page 526, quoting from Plumley vs. Mass. 155 U. S. 461, he said:

"Such legislation may, indeed, directly, or incidentally affect trade in such products transported from one state to another state. But that circumstance does not show that laws of the character alluded to are inconsistent with the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the several states."

Again, on page 529:

"The object of the food and drugs act is to prevent adulteration and misbranding, as therein defined. It prohibits the introduction into any state from any other state 'of any article of food or drugs which is adulterated or misbranded, within the meaning of this act.' The purpose is to keep such articles 'out of the channels of interstate commerce, or, if they enter such commerce, to condemn them while being transported or when they have reached their destinations, provided they remain unloaded, unsold, or in original unbroken packages.'"

And on page 532:

"Can it be said that Congress, nevertheless, has denied to the state, with respect to the feeding stuffs coming from another state and sold in the original packages, the power the state otherwise would have to prevent imposition upon the public by making a reasonable and non-discriminatory provision for the disclosure of ingredients, and for inspection and analysis? If there be such denial it is not to be found in any express declaration to that effect. Undoubtedly Congress, by virtue of its paramount authority over interstate commerce, might have said that such goods should be free from the incidental effect of a state law enacted for these purposes. But it did not so declare."

In the case of Simpson vs. Sheperd, 230 U. S. 352, 57 L. Ed. 1511, the Court said:

"State inspection laws and statutes designed to safeguard the inhabitants of a state from fraud and imposition are valid when reasonable in their requirement, and not in conflict with Federal rules, although they may affect interstate commerce in their relation to articles prepared for export, or by including incidentally those brought into the state and held for sale in the original imported packages."

If the State can, as decided in Savage vs. Jones, require an additional label disclosing ingredients and also stamps covering cost of inspection to be attached to the original package, without unconstitutional interference with interstate commerce, or with the operation of the National Food and Drugs Act, it certainly can enforce its own laws when food in violation thereof is offered for sale by a citizen of the State to other citizens of the State, even though the food was imported from another State.

It is therefore clear that the pure food statutes of the State of Pennsylvania which do not interfere with the labeling provided by the National Food and Drug's Act, or with the inspection of the Federal authority under that Act, do not even incidentally interfere with interstate commerce.

There is another consideration. The enforcement of the pure food laws of the State practically begins where the Federal control ends.

In the case of McDermott vs. Wisconsin, it is said in the opinion, page 136:

"To make the provisions of the act effectual, Congress has provided not only for the seizure of the goods while being actually transported in interstate commerce, but has also provided for such seizure after such transportation and while the goods remain 'unloaded, unsold or in original and unbroken packages.' The opportunity of inspection en route may be very inadequate. The real opportunity of government inspection may only arise when, as in the present case, the goods as packed have been removed from the outside box in which they were shipped, and remain, as the act provides, 'unsold.' It is enough, by the terms of the act, if the articles are unsold, whether in original packages or not."

The Pennsylvania statutes usually contain the language making it illegal to "sell, offer for sale, expose for sale or have in possession with intent to sell," any adulterated or misbranded article of food.

The Federal statute follows the goods from another State into Pennsylvania and on to the shelves of the retail merchant. When the goods get upon the shelves of the retail merchant the State inspection begins. There is no conflict of authority. The enforcement of Pennsylvania laws against goods on shelves of a retail merchant, is not even an incidental control of interstate commerce, nor is it any interference with Federal inspection.

I am aware that this opinion does not appear to be in harmony with the case of Corn Products Refining Company vs. Weigle, 221 Federal Reporter, 998, and the decree entered in that case which is before me, but not reported, certainly is not in harmony with this opinion, but there is no case in the United States Supreme Court which has gone to the length of the case just quoted, and, as I understand the decisions of that Court, the case of Corn Products Refining Company vs. Weigle has gone farther than any other case in that it completely ousts State inspection of goods that were once in interstate commerce, if such goods happen to be labeled in conformity with the National Food and Drugs Act, and prevents the operation of any State statute upon such goods, even as between a retail resident dealer and the resident consumer of the State. I cannot agree that the passage of the National Food and Drugs Act has such sweeping effect in destroying the police power of the State.

Therefore, specifically answering your inquiry, I am of opinion that after purchase and analysis of a bottle of catsup from the shelves of a store of a retail merchant in Pennsylvania, such catsup is found to violate the pure food laws of this State, such laws may be enforced, even though the catsup has been shipped from another state and is sealed and labeled in conformity with the National Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906.

I return herewith the correspondence submitted with your request.

Very truly yours,

WM. M. HARGEST,
Deputy Attorney General.

CONCERNING THE SALE OF OLEOMARGARINE.

The following opinion is published for general information.

Harrisburg, Pa., February 3, 1916.

Hon. James Foust, Dairy and Food Commissioner, Harrisburg, Pa.

Sir: Your favor of January 25, requesting an opinion of this Department as to whether a merchant holding a license to sell oleomargarine at retail, can take orders for the product in cities and towns other than the one designated in the license, and fill such orders by delivering the product by vehicle or otherwise, is at hand.

The oleomargarine law of May 29, 1901, which was amended by the Act of June 5, 1913, P. L. 412, provides in Section 1.

"That no person, firm, or corporation shall, by himself, herself, or themselves, or by him, her or their agent or servant, nor shall any officer, agent, servant or employee of any person, firm or corporation, manufacture, sell, ship, consign, offer for sale, expose for sale, or have in possession with intent to sell, oleomargarine.....unless such person, firm or corporation shall have first obtained a license and paid a license fee as hereinafter provided."

Section 2 provides, in part:

"That any person, firm, or corporation, and any agent of such person, firm or corporation, desiring to manufacture, sell or offer or expose for sale, or have in possession with intent to sell, oleomargarine, butterine, or any similar substance not made or colored so as to look like yellow butter, shall make application for a license so to do in such form as shall be prescribed which application, in addition to other matters which may be required to be stated therein by the said Dairy and Food Commissioner, shall contain an accurate description of the place where the proposed business is intended to be carried on if the said application is satisfactory to said Dairy and Food Commissioner he shall issue to the applicant or applicants a license authorizing him, her, or them to engage in the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine such license shall not authorize the manufacture, sale, exposing for sale or having in possession with intent to sell, oleomargarine, butterine, or any simliar substance, at any other place than that designated in the application and license."

Strictly construing the second section just quoted, it would seem to require a license not only from every person, firm or corporation engaged in the sale or manufacture but also from every agent of such person, firm or corporation, but the language of the first section indicates that when the license is obtained by a person, firm or corporation, such license shall authorize the agents, servants and employees thereof to manufacture and sell oleomargarine.

Under the provisions of this law it is clear that both the person and the place are licensed. It is also clear that oleomargarine could not be sold by an unauthorized person at an authorized place, or by an authorized person at an unauthorized place. In order to bring the sale within the terms of the statute, it must be made by a person who has been licensed, through himself or his agent, and from a place which has been licensed. The license issued to a person, firm or corporation, does not authorize an itinerant business in oleomargarine. This act must be construed to carry out the Legislative intent. Manifestly one of the purposes of the act was to have the oleomargarine business under the inspection and supervision of the Dairy and Food Commissioner. If a license were a roving commission to permit taking of orders in other cities and towns other than one designated in the license, it would make inspection or supervision by the Dairy and Food Commissioner extremely difficult.

If such a scheme could be followed, one person might take out one license for an entire county and transact his business by means of traveling agents taking orders therefor, or even extend such business into other counties.

It might be an unreasonable construction to hold that every clerk of a retail dealer who has a license to sell oleomargarine, must be also licensed because the act says that every agent of such person, firm or corporation desiring to manufacture, sell, offer or expose for sale, oleomargarine, shall make an application for a license so to do. Where a clerk or employee, in the regular course of his business is taking orders for other goods and along therewith, and as incident to such business takes orders for oleomargarine to be delivered with the other products, such transaction may fairly be covered by the retailer's license. On the other hand, it would be just as unreasonable, and do violence to the Legislative intent, to say that under this statute, a license to sell oleomargarine at retail, would permit the agents of the holder of the license to travel around into other cities and towns for the purpose of obtaining orders, even though the orders were to be filled by subsequent delivery from the place licensed. No such legislative intention can be gathered from this statute. The language is:

"Such licenses shall not authorize the manufacture or sale..... at any other place than that designated in the application and license."

To be more specific: If a retail merchant, who holds a retail oleomargarine license, has regular clerks taking orders for groceries, and orders for oleomargarine are taken along with other orders, by such regular clerk or employee and the oleomargarine is marked and set apart and the name placed on each package, in the place licensed, and delivered as and when the other goods are delivered, such a transaction would be within the license of the retail dealer.

It may be that there are retail dealers in cities whose regular trade extends into outlying districts. In such instances sales made, as above indicated, on orders taken in such territory, would be within the license.

But I am of opinion that a license to sell oleomargarine at retail does not give the holder thereof the right to send agents and canvassers to take orders, especially for oleomargarine, into territory into which the business of such retailer would not ordinarily extend, particularly into other cities and towns in which there are other similar licenses.

Very truly yours,

WM. M. HARGEST,

EATING TOO MUCH SALT.

During the past two years complaints that stock have been poisoned by eating coarse salt have reached the office of the Dairy, Food and Oil Department of the state of Wyoming, as we learn from the Bulletin of Analyses, and samples of the salt have been duly analyzed. The state chemist, we are told, has made a very careful analysis of all these samples but was unable to find anything abnormal or possibly dangerous about them. As it was a matter of vital importance to all the stock interests of the state, further investigation was necessary. The state veterinarian was called upon for an opinion and backed by his own experiences in such cases, he decided that and upon procuring all the data obtainable from the best authorities, and backed by his own experiences in such cases, he decided that only where an animal eats too much salt is there any danger. In many instances stock have been kept away from salt for some time and after getting to it were inclined to eat too much. If allowed to have their own way sickness will follow and in many instances death will occur within a short time. As eastern folks do not feed cattle on the same scale as in the cattle growers' country, there is less danger of trouble from this cause among them.

STILL BATTLING AGAINST LAW.

Here and there one continues to observe dealers and producers who cherish the notions that the food laws are all wrong and that it is a sort of personal and public duty to violate them in general and in particular at every convenient or inconvenient opportunity. Persons of that sort are everlastingly getting themselves into trouble, forcing the reluctant state to hale them into court and take away in fines and costs and lawyers' bills and other expenses considerable sums of their money. It is quite true the state does not relish this. But there's nothing else to do. The laws must be enforced. They are not harsh or exacting or unreasonable in their demands or in their restrictions. They seek chiefly, almost solely the protection of the consuming public. It is their aim to protect the too trustful purchaser from the ingrained rascality of some chaps and likewise to teach the latter that honesty is the best policy in business life and in every relation one man may be called upon to sustain toward another. Why not obey the laws and be happy all the year round?

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

W. B. Barney, Iowa Dairy and Food Commissioner, thinks that the use of horse flesh by the people of the east should be discouraged. The health department of New York has recently permitted horse flesh to be sold as food and the action has attracted wide attention in the livestock industry. "As long as beef and pork can be obtained at the prevailing prices I see no necessity for the Health Department of New York or any other city approving the sale of horse meat," said Mr. Barney. "I do not think that many people will take to the new article of food, but there may be some of the foreign population who having used horse meat in Europe will buy it here if it can be obtained."

Samples of food and beverages to the number of 1,292 have been examined during the year 1915 by the State Food and Oil Chemist of North Carolina, W. M. Allen, and his assistants, according to the sixteenth annual report on food adulteration which was recently issued.

Special Agent Gerrard Harris has forwarded the December figures of the 1915-16 Cuban sugar crop as published by two leading Havana estimators. The estimates differ to the extent of 10,000 tons, the one covering 188 centrals and placing the yield at 3,173,429 long tons (22,214,000 bags of 320 pounds) and the other covering 187 centrals and giving the probable output as 3,183,429 tons (22,285,400 bags).

The food inspection department of Kansas City is preparing to launch a campaign against careless handling of unprotected food-stuffs by deliverymen. For several months moral suasion tactics have been used to induce packers, bakers and all firms delivering unprotected and easily contaminated products to wrap the goods for delivery. Most of the dealers have agreed to comply with the order.

Dairy products contributed $40,000,000 to the wealth of Nebraska during the year 1915 according to an estimate made by Food Commissioner Harman from his official records and other information. Mr. Harman places the total value of the products of this industry much higher than the amount estimated by the state board of agriculture's statistical bureau. The Food Commissioner puts the value of all foods produced in the state this year at more than $500,000,000. This includes cereals, meats, dairy products, poultry and eggs, fruits, vegetables and sugar.

Announcement is made by Mrs. J. C. Martin, of Washington, D. C., of the founding of a national society which is to strive for pure food and low prices. It is named the National Hygiene Pure Food and Drug association. The society, it is explained, is thoroughly philanthropic, but has been organized on a businesslike plan in order to facilitate its maintenance and growth and to expedite its benefits to the individual members all over the United States. The founder is Humphrey Reid, of Washington, a sanitary engineer. A vice president will be elected for every state in which a branch of the organization exists. The society proposes a special campaign against the housefly, and is circulating literature on that subject.

Taking advantage of the opportunities that have been opened to develop Canadian trade with Great Britain several Winnipeg men interested in the fishery business have conferred with the Minister of Trade and Commerce with a view of placing fish from the northern lakes of Manitoba on the English markets. The British government having commandeered a number of the fishing vessels, there is a limited supply of fish in England at present and as the western lakes abound with white-fish a substantial business may result.

Speaker Channing Fox was the speaker at the forty-first annual meeting of the Massachusetts Fish and Game Protective Association. He urged an increase in the state work of propagating fish and game birds. He said that Massachusetts has been legislating on fish and game since 1623 and now there are 940 laws on the statute books bearing on this subject. He urged the association to assist in educating the people to a fuller desire to develop the water area of the state for food purposes. One-half the expenses of the Commission are derived from the issuance of about 75,000 hunters' licenses.

New Yorkers are not taking kindly to the horse meat diet, although the Board of Health has made a serious effort to get the horse meat sale started as an economy measure. Health Commissioner Emerson says that horse meat is cheaper than beef and quite as nutritious though slightly different in taste and somewhat coarser in fiber; that the horse is much less likely to suffer from tuberculosis than the cow and that the horse is much more discriminating in its eating and drinking.

More than $18,000,000 a year is spent by Omaha for groceries and meat annually, according to the Grocery Reporter, the official publication of the Omaha Retail Grocers' association. The statement is based on the estimate that 50,000 families each spend on an average of $1 a day with the butcher and grocer. This would make Omaha's grocery and meat bill $50,000 a day or $18,000,000 annually. The grocers' official organ also makes the statement that nearly 7,000 Omaha families are poor pay.

A number of American medical experts and experimenters in hygiene made a study to determine the most important factor in the production of clean milk—the dairy or the dairyman—and have come to the conclusion that the dairyman is the chief factor and that the dairy is of secondary importance. The clean dairyman may be transported from dairy to dairy and can make clean milk wherever he goes.

Buttermilk is a beverage which deserves every encouragement. Most of the fatty elements are removed in the process of making butter but several other valuable qualities are left. Among other things buttermilk contains a certain amount of casein. Buttermilk also contains an excess of the bacteria which are capable of producing great quantities of lactic acid and it is because of this that buttermilk is most valuable. This microbe does not exist normally in the human body, but can be introduced with very great benefit to the health as it preys on the hundreds of thousands of microbes which infest the intestines.

When a city ordinance sets a higher standard for milk sold in the city than the state law requires, the city still has the power to enforce the ordinance, according to a ruling of the Supreme Court of Kansas. The case was appealed from the Wyandotte county court. A Kansas City, Kansas, dairyman, was fined $100 for selling milk that conformed to the state standard but was below the standard set by the city ordinance. He appealed on the ground that there could not be two standards, but the Supreme Court could not see it that way.

The New York City Health Department has recommended more extensive use of goats' milk, especially for feeding infants, because of the immunity of goats from tuberculosis. It is considered the animal's milk may even exert a positive action in preventing infection or in influencing the course of infection already established.

Nearly 50,000 girls in the fifteen southern states were enrolled in 1915 in the girls' canning clubs carried on co-operatively by the state agricultural colleges and the Department of Agriculture. The purpose of these clubs is to encourage girls from 10 to 18 years to grow tomatoes and other vegetables in tenth acre gardens and to can their products for home use or for sale. The clubs are under the supervision of nearly 400 woman agents.

A good conscience ought to be worth considerable to a manufacturer of food products. And many of our manufacturers have that blessing.

Out in some sections of the west cattle have been dying off because they were allowed to eat too much salt.

Many manufacturers of standard food products in the United States are more anxious to maintain the reputation of their products than to make money. But it usually happens that such producers get both fame and wealth.

The Dairy and Food Bureau of the State Department of Agriculture was one of the busiest places in the country during late December and early January.

The grocer who secures a reputation among his patrons—casual as well as regular—for selling fine goods will find the range of his patronage gradually but surely extending. For the regulars will stay while many of the transient patrons will become regulars. They like what they got and the manner in which they were treated by the dealer.

The Stevens bill giving to the manufacturer of trade-marked goods the right to fix the retail price at which such goods may be sold, has been re-introduced in the present Congress and a strenuous effort will be made to push it through both branches during the session. Representative Ayres, of Kansas, fathered the bill at this session, its author, Raymond B. Stevens, of New Hampshire, having retired to private life.

Some time ago a grocer in Portland, Oregon, was fined $100 for selling a cake made of Chinese eggs, but not so labelled. An appeal has been taken to the Supreme Court of Oregon in order to determine the constitutionality of the law passed by the legislature of that state, session of 1915, prescribing that food products containing imported eggs shall be so labeled. A similar act in California is likewise going before the supreme court of that state. The outcome will be awaited with interest, although the laws seem to be about right.

Secretary of Commerce Redfield declares in his current annual report that there is a widespread interest abroad concerning the frog and a skilled investigator has been detailed to conduct a searching inquiry into the feeding habits, rate of growth and conditions of growth of the commercial species. The secretary is also interested in the fresh water mussel, better known as the Mississippi clam.

A PROPOSED INVESTIGATION.

Following is the statement of William T. Creasy, Secretary of the National Dairy Union, before Committee on Rules, on Linthicum Resolution:

As Secretary of the National Dairy Union, I do not come here to object to or resist the passage of a Resolution which will have the purpose of ascertaining important facts relative to the production and handling of American dairy and creamery products in a wholesome and sanitary manner. Nor do I, in behalf of those whom I represent, object to the appointment of a committee from the membership of the House not antagonistic to the producers of this country. We would be gratified if members of this committee were men who knew something of the problems of dairy production, handling and marketing. Especially will we not object if this investigation is made so broad, searching and comprehensive that this, in many respects the most important industry of the country, be disclosed not only in its actual conditions but its standing among the similar industries in other nations of the earth. Further we would be pleased if this investigation would show the relative care, sanitation and wholesomeness of this Industry's products in comparison with those of other industries whose representatives are assailing ours.

We are convinced from the enterprises and energy being exercised by a large portion of the dairy industries that there has been accomplished during the last five or six years a great advancement and improvement in sanitation and wholesomeness of the dairy products from the point of first production through the handling, distribution and marketing of the final product, so that to those not antagonistic or prejudiced an investigation would be entirely unnecessary were it not for the following two important facts:

First, there appears in the Annual Report of the Department of Agriculture, for the year 1912, contributed by the Bureau of Animal Industry, at page 334, the following remarkable statement:

FROM REPORT OF THE BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY, 1912.

Cream Investigations and the need of Creamery Inspection.

Investigations have been made of the sanitary conditions of creameries and cream-buying stations, also of the quality of the cream received and the methods used in its manufacture into butter, and the conditions under which cream is produced and prepared for market.

A special examination of 144 creameries and cream-buying stations located in 6 different States showed that only 8, or about 5.5 per cent. were absolutely satisfactory from a sanitary standpoint.

An examination of 1,554 lots of cream after being delivered to the creameries and cream-buying stations showed 113, or 7.3 per cent. to be of first grade; 484, or 31.1 per cent. of second grade; and 957, or 61.5 per cent. of third grade. The third grade consists of cream that is dirty, decomposed, or very sour. High acidity in ordinary cream indicates either age or bad conditions surrounding its production, handling or storage.

An inquiry covering 715 creameries located in 6 States showed that only 196, or 27.4 per cent. pasteurize their cream, while 519, or 72.6 per cent. do not pasteurize.

The results of these investigations may not represent with absolute accuracy the creamery industry as a whole, but they are certainly not far out of the way. While some creameries are in good sanitary conditions, receive good cream, practice pasteurization and other approved methods, and turn out a high-grade product, the number of such creameries is very small. Our investigations reveal the fact that 94.5 per cent of the creameries are insanitary to a greater or less degree; that 61.5 per cent. of the cream used is dirty or decomposed, or both; and that 72.6 per cent. of the cream is not pasteurized, but is made into butter to be consumed in a raw state. In other words, millions of gallons of cream that has been allowed to stand in the barn, in the cellar, or in the woodshed until it is sour or decomposed is sent to the creamery, and without even being pasteurized is made into butter. Butter is usually consumed in the raw state and may carry pathogenic organisms for a long period of time; but, aside from the danger of pathogenic infection, consumers should not be expected to eat a product from an insanitary place and made from material that is unclean and decomposed.

We have been studying this subject for some years and are fully convinced that the welfare of the public, as well as of the dairy industry, demands that something be done to correct these unwholesome conditions. The best remedy is believed to be a system of inspection such as is recommended in an earlier part of this report under the heading "Needed Legislation."

Remarkable! for two reasons: first, the very narrow and limited basis of fact; second, the broad sweep and unwarranted conclusion. Your attention is called to the fact that the investigation was confined to six States out of forty-eight—to 144 creameries and cream-buying stations, there being now 6,000 creameries and probably 40,000 cream-buying stations in the United States. The man who saw a swallow and declared that it was summer had nothing on the remarkable author of this extraordinary report. There was an examination of 1,554 lots of cream, said by the Department to have covered a period of three months, which compared with the many millions of commercial lots of dairy products handled in that period gives the investigation all the stability of an inverted cone.

The second extraordinary fact referred to is the comprehensive and elastic conclusion drawn where it says: "Our investigations reveal the fact that 94.5 per cent. of the creameries are insanitary to a greater or less degree." That conclusion might be drawn as against any line of industries, because it says to a "greater or less degree." If we assume the maximum, let us inquire Greater than what?—Greater than 99 per cent. or Greater than 1 per cent.—Less?—Less than what?—Less than 1 per cent. or Less than 50 per cent. To scientific minds this statement means nothing definite. To the average mind, given in all the solemnity of a Government Report, it is liable to be considered appalling.

The second extraordinary fact is the Resolution, almost sensational in its terms, which has not only been filed in the ordinary way in Congress, but has been scattered broadcast throughout the country and wherever sent has served to reflect upon the purity and wholesomeness of the dairy products produced and handled in this country.

It is to meet these two extraordinary and prejudicial documents alone that the investigation should be entered upon.

I am convinced that if this Committee will grant an adjournment of this hearing for a period of about thirty days, witnesses will be produced from different States and communities of the country who will establish the following facts:

First, that in the dairy States of the Union there are, many of recent origin, but all working at this time, effective laws governing the supervision and inspection of dairies and creameries and in practically every case the laws are being effectively enforced.

Second, we will show that of the commercial dairy products more than 60 per cent. are pasteurized, and that pasteurization is steadily increasing in every part of the country.

Third, that the large majority of dairy and creamery products which enter into Interstate commerce, we believe amounting to 75 per cent. is pasteurized.

Fourth, we are convinced that no industry in this country having to do with the production and handling of human food has made an advancement in purity and sanitation equal to that of dairy and creamery products during the last five years.

Fifth, that the State of purity and wholesomeness of commercial creamery and dairy products in this country is farther advanced than almost any country of the world.

Sixth, we expect to show to some extent at least the antagonism and unwarranted attacks made by other industries upon this industry, which involves to the producers of this country a billion dollars per year, and an industry upon which the continued fertility of our now fertile soils and the renewal of our depleted soils in this country largely depends.

Seventh, we will at this time, as I merely suggest, now, show that this is an industry to which there should be directed the most far-seeing statesmanship for the purpose of conserving and upbuilding rather than injuring and destroying.

To this end, and calling your attention to the fact that here in the National Capitol, on the 5th and 6th of May next, there will be gathered representatives from the industries of dairy products from throughout the States of the Union, men informed and skilled in their professions, who will be ready to appear before this Committee and give testimony, I ask that further hearing hereon be suspended until a convenient date from the 5th to the 10th of May.

In conclusion will say that yesterday, April 9th, we asked the Chief of the Dairy division for a list of the 144 creameries and cream-buying stations mentioned in the report. This was refused for the reason that the information is considered of a confidential nature. On further inquiry at this department it was stated that the investigation which found 94.5 per cent. of the 144 creameries and cream-buying stations insanitary was ordered in April, 1912, and completed July 1st, 1912, the work being done by two inspectors in three months. Hence it follows that five inspectors could examine these same creameries in less than a month and this would show the conditions of these creameries at the present time. This would give the Committee and the public much needed information which would be of great value in carrying on the investigation. We believe the Dairy division will do this and can have the information for this Committee at its next meeting of from May 5th to 10th.

COMMENTS.

The Bulletin is glad to publish Mr. Creasy's statement before the committee on rules. No doubt our readers will peruse it with interest. The attitude of the Bulletin toward the Linthicum resolution is that the whole thing discussed therein is a matter for the States to control under the ordinary police power. It is not a matter for congress, and we question whether congress actually has any opposition. Action on the resolution has been wisely postponed. Let us hope the postponement will prove indefinite.

It is likewise a fact that the resolution—even if its legality and the authority of congress were admitted—is entirely too general in its scope. It does not even designate the States in which the conditions recited are alleged to exist. The investigation made by the bureau of animal industry upon which the Linthicum resolution was based was too meagre and insignificant as well as indefinite to justify the proposed action. The truth is it was evidently intended to discredit the great dairy industry of the country. The Bulletin would not be surprised to learn that back of this uproar is the oleomargarine trust.

THOROUGHbred DAIRY COWS.

State as well as national; preparedness in the barn as well as on the battleship; plenty of butter as well as plenty of bullets; more money as well as munitions; organization and efficiency for business as well as for battles.

That's the doctrine which Hon. Scott Matthews, Dairy and Food Commissioner of Illinois, is preaching up and down the State. He has a round, red, smooth shaven face, and he smokes a corn cob pipe. He sells real estate for a living down somewhere towards Egypt. Just now he is State Food and Dairy Commissioner.

He does more than preach. Since he began he has led a procession of more than 500 big black and white and fawn colored thoroughbred milk cows into Illinois, and he has set his mark at adding no less than 100,000 Holstein and Guernsey to the bovine population of the State.

Example of Co-operation.

He sells blooded cows to farmers who don't want to buy them, and he makes hard shell country bankers advance all the money necessary to finance the purchase. His work is the best possible example of the preparedness which results when all kinds of people unite—from purely selfish reasons—to help each other get things running in efficient and profitable style.

Never did an advocate of the biggest navy in the world emit louder and more terrifying shrieks of warning than did Matthews when he started to stir up the farmers and the dairy interests of the State.

"Since 1890 we have added 2,000,000 people to the population of the State," screamed Matthews. "And there were actually 275,000 more milk cows in Illinois in 1890 than there were in 1915. Help, Help."

Matthews called all the big firms who make farm machinery, silos, stock feed and dairy tools into conference. He laid the facts before them.

He Gets The Gain.

"As a State official," he said, "I am not allowed to solicit funds for any purpose. But it will take a lot more money than the State has allowed me to do the necessary educational work among the farmers and business men of the State. If you men have any money you would like to invest in the promotion of future business, I can show you how to spend it."

A fund of $10,000 was promptly raised. Then Matthews tackled the bankers of the State. He told them that if the farmers made more money it would increase the profits of the bankers. He pointed out that dairy farming was one of the few branches of agriculture which adds to the fertility of the soil as well as to the profits of the farmer. He said that as the result of his investigation he was ready to prove that not more than half of the few dairy cows in the State earned their keep.

"Now gentlemen," he urged, "I want you bankers to advance enough money to finance the purchase of a lot of thoroughbred cows. I will send expert dairymen to select the cattle. I will bring a carload of these selected cows to your town, and my experts will feed and milk them for a couple of weeks, keeping every day a record of the milk and butter fat production of each animal. Then we will sell them to the farmers about your town at prices which will just cover the cost.

Bankers Agree.

"No doubt you will have to carry the purchase price of many of the cows on notes given by the individual farmers. But my experts will go right out into the country with each of these farmers and will stay there long enough to show him how to feed and handle the new cows in the most profitable way. I am sure it will prove a most profitable investment.

The bankers agreed. George Woodruff of Joliet, president of the State Bankers' Association offered to lend $250,000 to the bankers of the State, to be used as "cow money." Many of the individual bankers in various towns also took the matter up.

In half a dozen cities and towns Matthews called the surrounding farmers to talk the plan over. They were at first a little suspicious. The idea of paying $100 or more for a mere cow was startling.

"If you buy one of my cows," declared Matthews, "I'll guarantee that she will earn her feed the first year and pay interest in addition on $1,000. Half the cheap cows you are milking cost more for feed than you get for their milk.

Many Carloads Distributed.

Last year, as a result of Matthews work, five carloads of thoroughbred dairy cows were distributed among the farmers from Centralia as a center. Irvington took three carloads, Carbondale two carloads, Murphysboro one carload, and Carmi two carloads.

Within the last month farmers around Vienna, Ill., have bought four carloads. Morris City three carloads, Graysville two, Shawneetown two, Carmi two more, Olney one, and Pinckneyville two carloads.

Scott Matthews is an enthusiast. He says the invasion of Illinois by full blooded dairy cows has only begun. He's got men out now buying the best he can find in Wisconsin, Michigan and New York.

Also, he has interested the railroads. The Big Four system has agreed to furnish fifteen thoroughbred bulls to be distributed along the line of its road from Paris to Cairo. The Illinois Central starts with ten registered bulls, which will go to the farming communities in southern Illinois.

Matthews is, incidently, something of a show man. When a carload of his thoroughbred dairy cows or bulls arrives in a down-State town it is met by the town band and escorted in procession to the courthouse square. The farmers come in from miles around and the whole town gives itself up to a celebration.

"Preparedness?" asks Matthews, "Wait till you taste some of the milk and butter from our new stock."

SOME LITTLE BUG IS GOING TO FIND YOU ALONE AT LAST.

I. In these days of Indigestion

It is oftentimes a question
As to what to eat, and what to leave alone,
For each microbe and bacilious
Has a different way to kill us,
And in time they always claim us for their own.

There are germs of every kind in any food that you can find,
In the market or upon the bill-of-fare,
Drinking water is just as risky
As the so-called deadly whisky,
And its often a mistake to breathe the air.

Some little bug is going to find you some day,
Some little bug will sneak behind you some day,
Then he'll send for all his bug friends,
Then your earthly trouble ends,
Some little bug is going to find you some day.

II. The inviting green cucumber

Gets most everybody's number,
While the green corn has a system of its own.

Though a radish seems nutritious
Its behavior is quite vicious,
And a Doctor will be coming to your home.
Eating lobster, cooked or plain
Is only flirting with ptomaine,
While an oyster sometimes has a lot to say.

But the clams we eat in chowder
Make the angels chant the louder,
For they know that you'll be with them very soon.

Some little bug is going to find you some day,
Some little bug will sneak behind you some day,
With a nervous little quiver
You get Cirrhosis of the liver.
Some little bug is going to find you some day.

III. Take a slice of nice fried onion

And your fit for Doctor Munyon;
Apple Dumplings kill you quicker than a train.

Chew a cheesy midnight rare-bit
And a grave you'll soon inhabit,
Or to eat at all is such a foolish game,
Eating huckleberry pie is such a pleasing way to die,
While sauer-kraut brings on softening of the brain.

When you eat banana fritters
Every undertaker titters
And the casket makers nearly go insane.

Some little bug is going to find you some day,
Some little bug will sneak behind you some day,
Eating juicy slice pineapple
Makes the Sexton dust the chapel,

ENCOURAGE DEVELOPMENT.

From the Bradford Era.

The heathful expansion of any community as a rule, corresponds with the development of its surroundings. The growth of rural communities and farming districts is almost equally important to the urban merchant as the expansion of his home community. The city furnishes the farmer his best market; the patronage of the farmer follows his market and becomes a very substantial asset to the merchant. It follows, therefore, that rural development should be fostered and encouraged by every legitimate means as an accessory of urban growth.

One of the ties that bind the city and county together in the closest bonds is the milk supply which because of its perishable nature, must be of necessity drawn from the vicinity. In the interest of producer and consumer alike, the market for this staple should be stable and offer sufficient inducement to dairymen to guarantee high quality and purity. Under present conditions of distribution there is excessive waste in getting this fluid to the consumer. Profits are dissipated in the duplication of organization and equipment for serving patrons and the public pays bills in the way of poor service and inferior quality. While no one derives benefits at all commensurate with the importance of the business.

The perpetuation of these conditions is not only very poor business policy but it constitutes a standing menace to the health of the community that ought not to be tolerated in view of the fact that an easy and scientific way is open for its correction. When the Tuna Valley

Milk Company was organized an excess of enthusiasm and an over supply of confidence that the general public would readily recognize the merits of the proposition and rush to its support, led the promoters into the grave error of launching the enterprise before a sufficient amount of capital had been assembled to warrant a successful prosecution of the business. As a consequence early suspension followed. The outcome naturally created suspicion as to the soundness of the plan on the part of those unfamiliar with its details, and as a consequence, difficulty has been encountered in further effort to finance this enterprise which would mean more to Bradford and vicinity, perhaps, than any other involving like outlay.

The soundness of the proposition however, is not open to question. It deals with a vital necessity of the public; it provides for an absolutely pure milk supply; it provides for the scientific utilization of every drop of milk purchased through the manufacture of by-products; it supplies a stable market for the dairymen of this section, and gives encouragement for the further expansion of a fundamental industry; it provides for the economical and sanitary handling of milk and the economics that would be worked in the single item of distribution are sufficient to guarantee adequate returns upon the investment. Communities that have been brought to a State of prosperity through the establishment of milk plants by the large foreign corporations dealing in this staple are living examples of the practicability of centralized handling of the milk supply and of the desirability from a financial standpoint of home control. This is a practical proposition that would be taken up by practical men in a practical spirit and pushed to the point of practical demonstration while the modern plant now standing idle is available for the purpose for which it was constructed.

Another lesser project, but one of prime importance in laying the foundation for a greater industrial Bradford, is that of establishing a rest and comfort station for the use of visiting and local shoppers. A comfortable place where visitors would feel that they had a right to go for rest or refreshment without obligation to anyone would do much to popularize Bradford as a shopping center and would prove a convenience calculated to conserve health and good feeling. The initial expense would be comparatively small, the returns large and continuous.

These matters should be considered as preliminary to that greater expansion which is certain to come to Bradford if the opportunities of the present national revival in industry are not entirely overlooked. Action ought to be prompt and directed along business lines through a well organized medium. As the opening gun a careful industrial survey of the city is desirable and a few words along this line will appear later.

AN OLEOMARGARINE BILL.

Mr. Haugen in introducing the National Dairy Union Oleomargarine Bill, H. R. 13825, made the following statement: "Several bills are now pending in Congress which in effect would materially weaken the present oleo law if enacted. One Bill goes so far as to provide, 'That the artificial coloration of oleomargarine causing it to look like butter is hereby expressly permitted,' which, if enacted into law, would greatly build up the oleo industry at the expense of the dairy industry, making it possible to pawn off the counterfeit article for the genuine article at butter price. Thus, by deceiving the consumer, it would not only deprive the dairy industry of its legitimate market, but it would also enable the oleo manufacturer and dealer to swindle the consumer to the extent of the difference in the cost of the two articles.

"Hitherto objections have been made to the 10 cent tax, upon the contention that it is a tax upon the consumer. Now that the National Dairy Union and other representatives of the dairy interests have suggested and agreed to its removal, by substituting therefor a nominal tax, and prescribing a color standard beyond which oleo shall not go, the 10 cent tax argument has been abandoned and copies of a resolution introduced in congress and circular letters purporting to quote officials in the Department of Agriculture discrediting butter have been sent broadcast over this country, evidently to prejudice the people against the use of butter.

"The fraudulent sale of oleo at the time the Grout Bill was under consideration in 1899, disclosing the fact that manufacturers of oleo had entered into a conspiracy to break down the State laws and had resorted to dishonorable methods in forcing their counterfeit upon the public by avoiding and disobeying the laws of the land to the extent of 5,492 dealers, selling 62,825,582 pounds of oleo out of a total product of 83,130,474 pounds for the year, contrary to the laws of thirty-one States. The manufacturers went so far as to encourage and urge dealers to violate the laws of the States, and provided for a defense fund for the employment of the best legal counsel obtainable in defending illicit sales whenever prosecution was instituted, led to the passage of the present law. The object of the proponents of the present law was, first, to bring oleo under the jurisdiction of the federal government by imposing a nominal tax upon the article, and, second, to remove the incentive to defraud by taxing the coloring of the oleo causing it to look like butter, or the counterfeit, at the rate of 10 cents per pound which was then the difference in the cost of butter and oleo. Hence, not for the purpose of adding to the price of oleo or to the burden of the consumer as alleged by some, but to insure honest dealings in oleo. It was believed that with proper enforcement of the law it would prove effective. Undoubtedly it has served a good purpose as it has in a large degree, protected the consumer against deception and the dairy interests against imposition, but according to the Report of the Secretary of the Treasury for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, page 139, wholesale fraud is still being practiced.

"The Secretary in his report states that the Government had been defrauded through artificially colored oleo being sold under tax-paid stamps at one-fourth of one cent per pound instead of at the rate of 10 cents due on such product, by four manufacturers, the enormous sum of $17,692,410.47, since the inception of the present law. By another manufacturer, $1,503,205.30 in six years period. The five alone, in the aggregate $19,195,613.77 stamp taxes, exclusive of special taxes of wholesale and retail dealers incurred.

"In view of the alleged difficulty in enforcing the present law and the fraud perpetrated under it, the Secretary recommends amendatory legislation to correct these faults and at the same time afford adequate protection to the revenues and to the public. Mr. Cabell former Commissioner of Internal Revenue and others, testified and reported to the Agricultural Committee, numerous violations and suggested amendments to the present law. Recently forty-three persons were sent to the penitentiary for violations. Others are under indictment and, undoubtedly, will also go to the penitentiary.

"For some time it has been evident that the present law is not perfect in all its details but that it should be amended. For a number of years several, especially the officers of the National Dairy Union in consultation with others, have labored industriously and conscientiously to have the present law amended, not to weaken it but to strengthen it, to make it just and fair to the Oleo interests, to prevent fraud and to protect the dairy interest and consumer against imposition. In preparing and presenting such a bill, with the prevailing misconception of the purpose of the 10 cent tax, it was decided not to insist upon the 10 cent tax but to prescribe and insist upon a color standard, 70 per cent. white beyond which Oleo cannot go, except when colored for one's own family table, which is in line with the laws of the State of Pennsylvania and of Denmark and made possible by a practical means for scientifically measuring color, recently worked out by the National Bureau of Standards.

"The bill introduced provides that the name of oleomargarine shall be changed to margarine, that it shall be sold in $\frac{1}{2}$, 1 or 5 pound packages properly marked, wrapped and branded, that books shall be kept in such form as is prescribed and open to inspection, that a strip stamp shall be wrapped around each wrapper instead of the coupon stamp now used, for a flat tax of 1 cent per pound on all margarine, for special taxes on manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers, that the sale of margarine shall be subject to the laws of the State and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced in the original packages or otherwise, and for heavy penalties for violations of the law.

"This bill was introduced by me at the request of the National Dairy Union. It was prepared by men of experience and talent, with the aim to make it just and fair to all concerned. It is indorsed by the representatives of dairy interests. It should be passed speedily, without change, and as prepared by the Committee that drafted it. I trust that under existing conditions we may succeed in securing its passage and bringing about the results so much desired.

EUROPE BUYS AND SELLS CONDENSED MILK.

American condensed milk is enjoying a vogue in Europe that it never knew in peaceful times. The exports from this country in 1915 amounted to 76,000,000 pounds, valued at $6,000,000, according to figures furnished by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, and the bulk of these exports went to Europe. In normal times the value of condensed milk sold abroad varies between $1,000,000 and $2,000,000, and, ordinarily, the best customers are Cuba, Panama, China and Mexico.

The increased exports of condensed milk to Europe are easy to explain, under the circumstances, but there has been an increase in imports from European countries that is puzzling. Italy's recent participation in the American trade has caused some comment, but the fact that Holland and Switzerland sold much larger quantities of milk in the United States in 1915 than ever before is considered more remarkable, for these two countries have access to practically all the markets of Europe. The total imports into the United States from all countries in 1915 were valued at practically $2,000,000, or one-third of the exports, and although Canada furnished more than half, Holland did a business approximating $800,000 as against less than $300,000 the year previous. Switzerland is now selling to us at the rate of $250,000 a year, where formerly no milk came from that country.

NO PROSECUTION FOR VIOLATION OF STANDARDS OF PURITY.

A new factor has been introduced into the enforcement of the Federal Food and Drugs Act. In a case tried in Chicago by the Government against a spice company for selling adulterated peppermint extract and adulterated orange extract, the court ruled that as the law itself prescribed no standards of purity for food products the Government was without the power to prescribe any and nobody therefore could be convicted for selling goods which were not in conformity with Government standards.

There has always been more or less uncertainty as to the standing of the standards of purity and strength adopted by the Government. The law itself prescribes no standards, but it does give to certain officials, which it names, authority to make rules and regulations for carrying the law into effect. Several United States courts have already ruled that this includes the right to make standards, and that the government standards will therefore have all the effect of law unless it can be shown that they are unfair. The decision now made in this case upsets the situation and will undoubtedly be carried to the United States Supreme Court by the Government, which—if the decision is generally adopted by other United States Courts will be helpless where the basis of its case is violation of standards.

The case under consideration was based on the charge that the company had sold a peppermint extract containing less than 3 per cent. oil of peppermint (the Government standard) and orange extract containing less than five per cent. of oil of orange (the Government standard). At the outset of the case the point was raised that the Government had no right to make standards, therefore failure to conform with them was not illegal.

After exhaustive argument the court held that a person cannot be punished under the Food and Drugs Act for violating standards of circular 19, standards created by any public officials, standards erected by custom or otherwise, because the act itself does not in terms provide for any standards, nor does it adopt any existing standards or delegate to anyone the power and authority to create such standards. The court, therefore, directed that a verdict be entered finding the defendant not guilty and the defendant was accordingly discharged.

WHERE YOUR SALT COMES FROM.

Salt has been used in the fish business from time immemorial, in fact the first step away from the crude aboriginal method of drying fish in the sun consisted in the application of salt from natural deposits to the fish which primitive man captured in stream and sea. With commercialization of the fish business somewhere in the dawn of civilization the first and only prepared product was salt fish. In our own country years before it was found that many ocean delicacies could be distributed in canned form. Salt codfish was the one great product of our fisheries.

To-day salt continues to be to a large extent the cornerstone of the fish industry. In fact it may be broadly stated that practically no fish is preserved in any form except possibly freezing which does not entail the use of salt to a greater or less extent.

Very few of the many firms on this coast engaged in the production of fish foods have ever paused to wonder just where this salt came from and how it was prepared, and yet here on the Pacific coast, hand in hand with the fish business, has grown up a sister industry whose successful operation means much to the fishing industry. All of the salt used in the Pacific coast fishing industry is prepared here on the coast in the vicinity of lower San Francisco bay by local concerns who have for years labored to produce a pure and high class product for the benefit of the many industries such as the fish business which has been dependent on them for their supply of this important commodity.

The salt for Pacific coast fisheries is obtained by solar evaporation and San Francisco is one of the few places in the world where it is practical to carry on this method. It is one of the oldest processes in the world, dating back to the year 600 B. C. It is carried on at San Francisco bay more extensively than anywhere else in the world because of the extremely favorable climatic conditions, the evaporation exceeding the rainfall by an average of twenty-seven vertical inches a year. This has enabled the San Francisco refiners to perfect the solar process to a very high degree. Many of these plants have been in operation for more than fifty years and the process has been so well developed that the product is without a doubt the best and most suitable for the curing and salting of fish.

Long ago when the first primitive man came upon a stagnant pool of brackish sea water left by the tide upon the beach, and collected from its margin the whitish crystals of salt for seasoning his evening meal of fish, was gained the secret of how to obtain this all important food from the ocean.

To-day the salt taken from the Pacific Ocean around San Francisco bay is vastly different from that gathered and stored so carefully by early man. The first process is the same—solar evaporation. The water drying up deposits the salt crystals on the bottom of the pool. But, if, as heretofore, all the water were allowed to evaporate at once all of the impure salts that are held in the water would be left with the good salt. Instead by careful observance of the laws of chemistry, as one undesirable salt is deposited the remaining brine is pumped into another settling tank. This is repeated until all the sodium salts are deposited. These crystals are then heaped into pyramids and the remaining impurities which are held in solution are drained away.

The plants are situated on low marshes covered naturally by high tides. These are divided by means of high piles driven into the mud and by earth embankments into a series of huge vats or reservoirs. In one typical plant these reservoirs are seven in number, all but the last of which are on the natural surface of the ground, that is are without artificial bottoms. The entire area enclosed in the seven vats is some 1,600 acres, necessitating some fifteen miles of levees. The season of manufacture lasts from May to October. At the beginning of the spring tides, which rise from twelve to fifteen inches above the marsh level, the fifteen gates of reservoir No. 1, comprising some 900 acres are opened and the waters of the bay are allowed to flow in. In this great artificial salt lake the water is allowed to stand until the organic content has precipitated, which usually requires some two weeks. Then by means of pumps driven by wind-mills the water is pumped from reservoir to reservoir as the concentration continues till finally the salt crystalizes out in No. 7 and the bittern is pumped back into the bay. The annual product of a plant of the size of the one just described is about 20,000 tons.

The industry is a highly important one, some seven different producing firms being engaged. Their annual production is in the neighborhood of 100,000 tons, ranging from coarse grades for manufacturing purposes to the finest quality of table salt.

Salt is one commodity which has always been handled on a very narrow margin and notwithstanding the fact that all foodstuffs continue to increase in cost from year to year salt is cheaper to day than it was ten years ago. Salt was, in fact, at one time considered a luxury and was sparingly used, but to-day, because of improvements in the manufacturing processes, salt is cheaper than ever before.

WOULD REDUCE FOOD PRICES.

Commissioner John J. Dillon of the New York Department of Foods and Markets said recently that if his department had an appropriation of $20,000 for one year's advertising purposes—and he may ask for it—he would be able to prevent in a large degree, the fixing of exorbitant prices for certain foodstuff necessities and would save millions of dollars to consumers in that city and elsewhere.

"If I had the money at my disposal," the commissioner said, "I would advertise from time to time in the newspapers the wholesale and retail price of, say eggs, for instance, that had been shipped to this department by the producers for sale. I would give the name of the chain stores or other concerns that took the eggs off our hands, with their location and retail prices at which they were selling eggs. In this way housewives would know where to get eggs at reasonable prices and other retailers would understand that if they were not satisfied with a fair profit they would be apt to lose trade."

"I honestly believe," continued the commissioner, "that by some such system of taking the public into the confidence of the department a lot of money could be saved to the consumers."

SAFE FARMING.

Seven objections to a one-crop system of agriculture are set forth in Circular No. 56 of the office of the Secretary which is a reprint of an address delivered by Bradford Knapp at a conference of southern bankers. The reasons why a one-crop system is unsafe are stated by Mr. Knapp to be as follows:

First. Because the system depends upon market and crop conditions of the one crop alone. Failure of crop or failure of market alike bring serious disaster.

Second. Because it does not provide for the maintenance of soil fertility.

Third. Because it fails to provide for a sufficient live-stock industry to consume the waste products of the farm and make waste land productive.

Fourth. Because it does not provide for a system of farm management under which labor, teams and tools may be used to the fullest advantage.

Fifth. Because it brings returns in cash but once a year instead of turning the money over more than once a year.

Sixth. Because it does not produce the necessary foods to supply the people upon the farm and keep them in health and strength.

Seventh. It limits knowledge, narrows citizenship, and does not foster home building but does encourage commercial farming."

The remedy for these evils is diversification. Diversification, however, means something else than a change from growing cotton to growing something else. One Louisiana man who believed that he was a convert to diversification, planted 500 acres of tomatoes. In other instances farmers turned from cotton to corn and had nothing else for sale in the fall. This, of course, is not diversification at all. The term is defined in the new circular as "an agricultural system through which the living of the people upon the farm is first produced and then a number of products suited to the soil, climate, and the market conditions of the country are judiciously selected and made the main items of profit through sale in the great markets of the world, always keeping in mind the necessity for maintaining the fertility of the soil.

This is practically the same thing as "safe farming." The essentials for its attainment are as follows:

"1. A home garden for every family on a farm.—From one-tenth of an acre to one-fourth of an acre, well located, well tilled and tended as carefully as any other crop on the farm is what we mean by a home garden. It must be planted in rotation so as to have continuous crops, thus providing something for the family table as many days in the year as possible.

"2. Produce enough corn to last the family and livestock, with certainty for one year, with a little excess for safety.

"3. Produce enough oats and other small grains to supplement the corn as food for a year. Remember these small grains conserve the soil in winter and provide some grazing for live stock.

"4. Produce the hay and forage crops necessary to supply the live stock on the farm for one year, not forgetting the winter and summer legumes which not only produce hay but also enrich the soil.

"5. Produce the necessary meat for the family by increased attention to poultry and hogs. I say poultry and hogs because they can be increased most rapidly for meat production. Then farmers should plan gradually to increase and improve through breeding, the cattle and other live stock, so as to consume the otherwise waste products and make our unprofitable or untillable lands productive. Every family should have at least two cows, so that one can be in milk all the time. We should set some standard to which to work.

VALUE OF MANURE.

The high prices of potash and acid phosphate at this time are causing much concern among farmers who depend upon commercial fertilizers to supply these constituents for the successful production of their crops.

If the farmers of this country had always appreciated the true value of farm manure, and used it on their land, the present situation would be much less acute. The annual loss of fertilizing materials is enormous in this country through careless handling of manure. This loss can be easily prevented, in a large measure, by proper methods of handling of manure. While many farmers are getting the most from the manure produced on their farms, yet many could well exemplify the European farmer in this matter, who saves carefully and utilizes every pound of manure available.

The farmer who feeds as much live stock as possible may figure that he is receiving a double remuneration from his crops: First, from the marketing of feeds through live stock; and, second, from the fertilizing substances which are left in the manure. Practically all of the nitrogen, phosphorus and potash which is in the feeds is recovered in the manure from the live stock. All landowners, farmers and tillers of the soil should always be keenly conscious of this fact, and employ methods of management accordingly.

It is a well-known fact that the animal uses the nitrogen, phosphorus, potassium and other elements of the feed stuffs to build up the body, carry on the work of the body, and to produce milk, work, wool, etc. At the same time we must remember that all of these processes involve the building up and breaking down of the body cells, and the component parts of these broken down cells are thrown off as waste matter.

In this waste matter we have the same elements as were in the feed stuffs consumed, except in cases of growing animals, whose bodies are increasing in size, practically the same amount of nitrogen, phosphorus, potassium are voided in the manure as were contained in the feeds eaten. The exact percentages of these substances voided by live stock varies within wide limits, depending largely upon the age and kind of animal, amount of feed eaten, work which the animal is doing and various other factors. A young and growing animal retains a large part of these elements in the growing tissues of the body. A dairy cow uses a portion of them in the production of milk. A hard working horse or a mature fattening animal voids from ninety to one hundred per cent. of them. It is then certain that a large percentage of the elements of plant food removed from the soil by growing crops remains on the farm where these crops are fed and that the annual value of feeds is in direct proportion to their composition.

WHAT IS FARM MANAGEMENT?

"Farm management as a branch of agricultural science is defined as follows in an address recently delivered in New England by one of the specialists of the Department of Agriculture:

"The farm management investigator gets his information direct from the farmer. The solution of many of the practical problems of agriculture are found to have been already solved generations ago by large groups of farmers; particularly is it true of farm management and organization. Every farmer is of necessity more or less an experimenter. The results of thousands of experimenters gathered by the farm management investigator, classified and interpreted in their bearing on the community's problems and on the individual farm's problems, yield not only many fundamental broadly applicable principles of good farm organization, but also show in more or less detail in just what respect a successfully operated farm differs from one which is a failure or only moderately successful.

"In previous decades the agricultural investigator largely concerned himself with the study of how to accomplish certain ends. How best to feed a pig or cow; how best to raise potatoes or fruit. The farm management investigator is concerned with determining whether to keep cows or pigs; whether to raise fruits or potatoes; and, if an industry be found to be desirable, to what extent it should enter into the farm organization, and with what intensity it should be pursued. All of these problems have in the aggregate been solved by the farmers. Farm management is merely a science for classifying and interpreting the collective experience of the farming people as to what constitutes business efficiency in farming.

"Farm management considers farming as a business. It attempts to analyze the various factors having to do with the success or failure of that business as it is found conducted on the individual farm, and in-so-far as possible to determine the broad outstanding factors for efficiency which admit of general application for a region."

SALMON ALASKA'S MOST IMPORTANT FISH.

The most important fish in Alaska, if not in the whole country, is the salmon of which there are four kinds. The value of the salmon taken this year amounted to $20,000,000, which was canned in eighty-seven canneries, and it included 60 per cent. of the catch of the Pacific coast. In addition to this many thousand barrels of pickled salmon. There are some salmon canneries in Alaska with a capacity of 7,500,000 cans a year and in addition will freeze hundreds of thousands of pounds to be sent in a frozen state to the east. Catching and bringing the salmon to the canneries is another important branch of the industry. The fish are caught in traps both stationary and floating, in nets, in seines, in fish wheels moved by the currents of the river.

MANY REASONS FOR EATING OYSTERS.

In these days of costly living it is good to be told that the price of oysters has not risen, for oysters are among the most nutritious and easily digested of animal foods for man, says Garrett P. Serviss in The New York Evening Journal. The Bureau of Fisheries is authority for the statement that the oyster "is more nearly than most foods self-sufficient as a diet." Moreover, it has a reputation as a "brain food" which probably arises from its ready digestibility, because whatever enables the bodily machine to run strongly and easily necessarily steadies and stimulates the brain cells. "It is remarkable among ordinary food substances," says the same authority, "in its high proportion of glycogen, a substance resembling starch, but more readily and easily assimilated, and like starch, wholly digestible even when uncooked."

There you have the explanation of the great popularity of raw oysters, which is also due, of course, to their delicious and altogether inimitable flavor when properly seasoned. Once in a while you meet a person who doesn't like raw oysters, but such persons are rare and usually convertible. Some persons learn to like oysters as boys learn to like tobacco, by repeated trial. The cryptic charm is as beneficent in the one case as it is maleficent in the other.

It is also good to be assured by official authority that "it can be said that oysters are today more sanitary and better than ever, and that there is, at least, as sufficient a guarantee of their wholesomeness as there is of milk, strawberries, lettuce, celery and other foods not usually cooked for consumption."

For the cheer of those who like oysters, but are afraid of possible pollution it is added that "if oysters be cooked there is a double guarantee," which I take to mean that when cooked the oyster is altogether harmless and no less nutritious. A steaming oyster stew, made by a competent cook, is certainly a terrestrial ambrosia, which diffuses a delicious sense of comfort through the whole body as nothing else can do. Every organ and function feels the genial influence. High authority avers that the oyster needs the ordinary ingredients used in cooking—starches and fats—to give it balance. It may be so but, personally, I find no lack of balance in the raw oysters. My mouth waters at the recollection of the raw oysters from a can which I used to eat when a boy in the country, when oysters in the shell were not to be had. But a strong argument in favor of cooking is that by the addition of a few inexpensive ingredients, a dish of cooked oysters, whether broiled, steamed, creamed, sherried, fricassed or otherwise prepared, makes a more satisfying meal than the same number of raw oysters would do.

It is safe to wager that not one in a hundred persons who eat oysters with great gusto knows that an oyster in its infancy lives without a shell and swims about in the water although it is never a speeder. In its larvae state the embryo oyster is furnished with little bristles with which it rows itself along, or keeps suspended in the current. After a short time a shell begins to form, and the weight of this as it grows, brings the creature down to the bottom, where it fixes itself upon some solid object, preferably a rock.

The vast majority of the little oysters are swallowed up and smothered by sand and mud, but a few survive out of the millions that are born from the eggs of a single female. When the little cysters first become attached to colonies to the bottom they are called "spat." When they get large enough to be transported to other places where they may finish their growth, they are called "seed oysters." There is a good deal to be learned about an oyster besides the way to eat it.

ECONOMIC OBJECTIONS TO COLORED OLEOMARGARINE.

Hon. James H. Maurer, president of the State Federation of Labor, a member of the Pennsylvania Legislature for several terms, gave to the secretary of the National Dairy Union the following statement for publication:

"For the past six years, or the three last legislative sessions of Pennsylvania, I opposed all proposed legislation which aimed to legalize the coloring of imitation butter by manufacturers and dealers. My objections are not based on any thought that coloring matter is unhealthful or that imitation butter is not fit for human consumption. My objection is solely an economic one. At present imitation butter, in its natural state, sells for from 18 to 22 cents a pound in Pennsylvania, while the genuine dairy product costs 36 cents a pound. The purer the imitation the whiter it is. If the manufacturers and dealers in the imitation article were permitted to color their product, the imitation would be complete, so much so that nothing short of an analysis would reveal its component parts. This is at least true of the great majority of consumers.

"The imitation article, therefore like any other imitation which closely resembles the genuine, comes in direct competition with it. Once we allow it to be colored, its price will begin to soar dangerously to the real article, and, as a consequence, the consumer who is now buying oleomargarine for 20 cents a pound, will pay the advanced price.

"One thing sure, the farmer never could hope to compete with the manufacturers of the imitation article. As a result, many of the dairy farmers would be compelled to go out of business and turn their farms to raising something else. And just as fast as this happens, the price of the imitation article will rise until finally the great packing companies will have a monopoly, then the consumer will pay more for the imitation article than we are now paying for the genuine. Besides the imitation will, most likely, not be as pure as it is now, if colored, because the purer, the whiter, and the consumer knows this. When colored a certain amount of impure, foreign matter may be used and cannot be detected by sight because of the coloring.

"On the other hand, if the farmers cannot find a profitable market for their milk and turn their farms to other products, it means the starving of their land, for as fertilizers cattle are the life of soil.

"Therefore, looking at the question from every angle possible, I can see but two reasons why some dealers and manufacturers want a law giving them a right to color in imitation of butter, their product; one is to charge more for their product, and the other, to give them a monopoly of the butter market.

"Let oleomargarine and butterine and all other substances stand on their own feet and sell for what they are and not for what their manufacturers can make people believe they are."

CLEANLINESS IN DAIRY PRODUCTS PLANTS.

Lord Palmerston said that dirt is an object out of its proper place. Anything that gets into milk, butter or cheese, which does not belong there is dirt, remarks the Creamery and Milk Plant Monthly. Most of this dirt, especially undesirable ferments, like disease bacteria or such micro-organisms as produce the kind of fermentations in milk and milk products which are not wanted, which spoil the taste, generate offensive odors, or cause the goods to spoil too quickly, can be kept out if proper care is taken in the handling of the product. But it must be properly handled at every stage. All the care taken may go for naught if there is one stage at which entry is afforded to destructive germs. Pasteurized milk may be reinforced in the bottling process, butter may take up injurious bacteria when exposed to impure air, cheese may be spoiled by foreign ferments dropping into the tube. While a great deal can be done by careful treatment; the cautious creamery man or milk dealers will see to it that the opportunities for infection are reduced to a minimum. One of the most effective ways to do this is to have the rooms and utensils, such as tables and vats, covered with a material that affords the least possible facility for dirt to cling to it, and the opportunity to discover any dirt that may happen to land on it. A bright surface, as near white as possible, is best for the latter purposes, and a smooth surface that is hard and non-porous is best for the former purpose. Both have the additional advantage that they help make the place light and light is the greatest enemy of bacterial life. Briefly, cleanliness is the most important consideration in the production of wholesome, savory, and stable milk products.

Creamery men and milk plant owners are beginning more and more to employ materials for covering walls and ceilings of rooms where milk, cream or cheese is handled and exposed to the air, which shall answer the requirements set forth above. In that respect they are following the lead of hospitals which use such materials for operating rooms, refrigeration plants, refrigerators, etc., where the problems are in a general way similar.

WHAT SOME BAKERS USE.

From the National Pure Food Laws.

Real eggs and butter are rarely found in bakers' shops.

Butter, as a rule, is but little known in the bakery, oleomargarine and products of cottonseed oil being chiefly used as shortening agents. Condensed skimmed milk, purchased by the barrel, is largely substituted for fresh milk. Perhaps needless to say, few if any bakers spend their money for cream of tartar, the familiar alum-phosphate mixture uniformly taking the place of this expensive leavening agent.

Of course it is in the average bakeshop that the manufacturers of compound and imitation jams and preserves find an extensive outlet, these products marketed in two-gallon wooden pails being very extensively used as pie fillers and for cakes. Some of the apple thus employed is sloppy and far from inviting in appearance, evidently having cost the manufacturer but little, either for material or labor. Most of this sort of material, however, is quite as cleanly and wholesome as any of its kind retailed from the consumer. One notable improvement in this connection is the fact that benzoate of soda or other chemical preservative is now far less frequently employed than formerly. On the other hand, its familiar running mate, "coal tar dye," is still conspicuously in evidence in many of the products which the baker uses, although it should be noted that almost invariably the manufacturers are careful to do their part in correct labeling and making proper declaration.

It should be pointed out that where most bakers are apt to make a mistake is in supposing that because the raw materials as sold to them are properly labeled and are "guaranteed under the Food and Drugs Acts" this fact absolves them from any responsibility of their own under such law, in connection with their sale of the final products. The law makes it just as incumbent upon the baker who retails a "raspberry turnover" made from mixed stock to notify his patrons of its character, as it does upon the manufacturer to properly label such stock before it goes to the baker.

FAKE "DIABETIC" FOOD.

The country has long been flooded with fake "diabetic" foods. Now the United States government takes a hand and separates the sheep from the goats. Following is its ruling to which these foods must correspond:

Ground gluten is the clean, sound product made from wheat flour by the almost complete removal of starch and contains not more than ten per cent. of moisture, and calculated on the water free basis, not less than fourteen and two-tenths per cent. of nitrogen and not more than fifteen per cent. of nitrogen-free extract (using the protein factor 5.7) and not more than five and five-tenths per cent. of starch (as determined by the diatase method).

Gluten flour is the clean, sound product made from wheat flour by the removal of a large part of the starch and contains not more than ten per cent. of moisture, and calculated on the water free basis, not less than seven and one-tenth per cent. of nitrogen, not more than fifty-six per cent. of nitrogen-free extract (using the protein factor 5.7) and not more than forty-four per cent. of starch (as determined by the diatase method).

Gluten flour, self raising, is a gluten flour containing not more than ten per cent. moisture, and leavening agents with or without salt.

"Diabetic" food. Although most foods may be suitable under certain conditions for the use of persons suffering from diabetes the term "diabetic" as applied to food indicates a considerable lessening of the carbohydrates found in ordinary products of the same class and this belief is fostered by many manufacturers on their labels and in their advertising literature.

A "diabetic" food contains not more than half as much glycogenic carbohydrates as the normal food of the same class. Any statement on the label which gives the impression that any single food in unlimited quantities is suitable for the diabetic patient is false and misleading.

FISH AND COLD STORAGE.

Cold storage has been a benefit to the produce and meat industries, but has been far more for the fisherman. For vegetables, left to themselves, grow at certain seasons; meat is procurable, naturally at any season, but the supply of fish is dependent entirely on the caprice of nature.

As yet the cold storage is not playing the part in connection with the fisheries to which it is entitled. It is doubtful if its true function is as yet understood by the industry itself. And until such time as the industry understands the place of the cold storage, and the general public comprehends the utility of the warehouse and the truth about cold storage foods, the freezer must remain misunderstood.

For the real function of the cold storage in this respect is to enable the dealers to provide the public with sea foods at those periods when very little fish is being caught and landed. It is the safety valve of the industry, by means of which the distribution of sea food is to be regulated.

The conditions for catching the fish also vary greatly from season to season. The spring and fall are usually poor seasons, with gusty variable winds and high seas. The winter weather, while steadier, also is mighty poor for fishing.

Weather, however, is a very poor thing to be dependent upon at any season. A sudden storm may practically paralyze the fisheries for days, cutting off the entire supply of fresh groundfish. Receipts at the fish piers may then drop from hundreds of thousands of pounds to a few hundred pounds. The dealers find the public demanding fresh fish just the same, but they have no fresh fish with which to supply the demand.

The inevitable happens. Up goes the price of fish. And this is most apt to happen when the general public actually needs cheap fish.

Judicious use of the cold storage would do much to alleviate this. There is no conceivable reason why the superfluous fish of a glutted market should not be put into cold storage rather than be sent to the curing house or the cannery.

It is done with mackerel and swordfish, two varieties of sea food only to be caught at certain short seasons of the year, and to a very slight extent with groundfish.

In the case of mackerel and swordfish the freezer fulfills the function filled in the produce business by the hothouse, enables the well-to-do consumer to obtain out-of-season goods. For this reason there is a greater margin of profit in freezing these varieties, and naturally the dealers prefer to invest their capital in it.

Again the dealers have found the public prejudiced against cold storage foods. Although they probably could not be told from the freshly caught article by one out of every hundred consumers, the name "cold storage fish" seems to stigmatize them as undesirable.

Nothing can do the work of nature so well as nature herself. Neither the hothouse, the cannery nor the cold storage can be expected to turn out a product as fine as nature. But on the other hand, a half a loaf is better than none, and in these days when the average housewife is battling tooth and nail with "the high cost of living" the hothouse, the cannery and the cold storage product is not to be despised, but to be looked upon as a legitimate substitute for nature's work.

Through the cold storage alone can the public hope to have a steady supply of sea foods at moderate prices.—Frederick Roche, New England Fish Exchange.

TUBERCULOSIS AND ITS CONTROL.

Tuberculosis is an important subject both as a health and as an economic problem.

There are a few fundamental facts concerning this disease which every person interested in the live stock industry should be familiar with. While this knowledge may be more necessary where tuberculosis is most prevalent, however, it is not without advantage where tuberculosis is less prevalent, that intelligent methods of prevention may be carried out.

We will attempt to enumerate some of the important phases associated with the control and eradication of tuberculosis: First, it must be clearly understood that tuberculosis is a specific communicable disease (often spoken of as contagious and infectious). By specific, we mean that it is due to a specific cause. This cause is a minute organism known as the tuberculosis bacterium (or bacillus) first described by Dr. Robert Koch, of Germany, in 1882.

The old notion that tuberculosis is due to coughs, colds and the like is erroneous. While it is true that these and poorly lighted, badly ventilated homes or stables, lack of nourishment, etc., do weaken the body and lessen its resistance to tuberculosis or any other disease, still if the specific organisms that causes the disease are not present in sufficient quantities, these exciting or predisposing causes cannot produce the disease.

To illustrate, we might have a field, harrowed and fertilized and in an ideal condition to grow a crop of wheat as far as fertility is concerned, but we must sow the wheat if we expect it to grow. Having this knowledge the next thing that concerns us is, how is the tuberculous germ most frequently transmitted to the human body.

Modes of Infection.

While there are several possible ways of infection, particularly in localities where the disease is very prevalent, still by far the most common are: (a) By the introduction into the digestive tract of material contaminated with the tuberculosis organisms. (b) By the inhalation of air similarly infected.

Therefore, the feeding of animals, particularly young animals, food principally milk, containing tuberculosis bacteria is one of the surest methods of infection. The danger of putting healthy animals in an infected stable, or bringing diseased animals into a healthy herd, is also at once apparent.

The next thing of importance is, how may we determine whether or not animals are infected with the disease?

Diagnosis.

The two practical methods that we have for determining the presence of tuberculosis are: (a) The physical examination. (b) The various tuberculin tests (the subcutaneous, intradermal, and ophthalmic). Unfortunately, the physical examination cannot be relied upon in the majority of cases. It is the opinion of the majority of authorities that a large percentage of the so-called "spreaders" (animals which are giving off tuberculous organisms more or less constantly) can be detected on a careful physical examination made by a thoroughly trained veterinarian. While it is our opinion that many of the "spreaders" may be detected by such an examination, still we question if a large percentage of all "spreaders" could be so determined.

The arrest and progress of the disease, the healing and breaking of new and old lesions which is so characteristic even in well nourished animals, would have much influence upon the accuracy of this method of determining whether it is or is not a "spreader." In attempting to control and eradicate tuberculosis the physical examination alone would make slow progress since experience has taught that in a large dairy herd well cared for and well nourished, we may have a high percentage of tuberculosis with but few of the animals showing any positive clinical symptoms of the disease, but many of the unsuspected ones being found badly diseased when slaughtered and the internal organs exposed. As long as such animals are allowed to remain in a dairy herd as centers of infection all efforts and money expended in ridding that particular herd of tuberculosis are practically being wasted.

However the physical examination has merits and is surely an advantage in reducing tuberculosis. This is particularly so in advanced lung cases and tuberculosis of the udder, two forms which are obviously very dangerous, the one giving off tuberculosis germs in discharges from the lungs and the other giving off germs in the warm fluid which acts as a splendid media for the nourishment of the germs and at the same time is usually consumed in a raw state. But by reviewing the symptoms of tuberculosis we at once weaken any argument in favor of the physical examination alone.

Symptoms.

The symptoms of tuberculosis may range from simply the presence of organisms in some of the body secretions and excretions, without the slightest sign of disease so far as physical appearance goes, to the most dejected and emaciated animal it is possible to picture.

Stockmen sometimes state that they can tell as well as any veterinarian or any test when one of their animals has tuberculosis. This idea is often very unfortunate for the stockman, in that he is simply fooling himself. For instance, an animal may have tuberculosis of the pleura and peritoneum, liver, intestines and a great number of the lymphatic glands and possibly be giving off tuberculosis organisms in great quantities both through the digestive tract and through the milk; in fact may be a veritable living manufacturer and distributor of tuberculosis germs and still remain for a time at least one of the fattest, sleekest, and best looking animals in the herd. This has been repeatedly proven by examination of milk and body discharges, and by the tuberculin test and post mortem findings. Therefore, we can realize how hard it would be to attempt to lay down any rules whereby tuberculosis could be diagnosed by a physical examination with any certainty. The best we can do is to enumerate some of the conditions which are likely to be present and observable when the disease is located in certain parts or organs.

Acute or quick tuberculosis is rather rare in animals except when complicated with other acute ailments. It is usually slow and chronic in type. No body organ or tissue seems to be immune to the infection, though certain tissues are more susceptible than others. For instance, post mortem inspections show that a large majority of bovine animals are affected in the lymphatic glands, particularly the glands termed retropharyngeal, which are located in the throat; the bronchial and posterior mediastinal glands located along the trachea and between the lungs; occasionally the prescapular, located at the shoulder; and the precrural, located in front of the stifle. The organs which are most frequently attacked are the lungs, liver, intestines and udder.—J. F. Devine in Hoard's Dairyman.

Tuberculosis of the lymphatic glands may be detected if these glands are located in a region where they can be palpated or handled. The old notion seems still to prevail that when man or animal has consumption the lungs are the organs that must be involved and that unless a man or animal breathes very irregularly and coughs incessantly tuberculosis cannot possibly be present. As we have stated the lungs are commonly the seat of tuberculosis either mild or extensive; when extensive a physical examination usually reveals certain conditions. But again if the lower part of the lungs only is affected, it is quite possible that the cough be absent and percussion or auscultation will give very little positive information in these cases. What is true of the thoracic organs is also true of the abdominal organs.

The symptoms of emaciation which we would naturally look for will depend largely upon the location and character of the lesions. If the lesions are extensive, either in the thoracic or abdominal organs or both and are located in vital parts of these organs, we then would expect great emaciation and weakness and perhaps a painful weak cough, diarrhoea, etc. These are the cases the stockman can easily detect, but they have been long dangerous before they reach such a stage, and if the animal so affected has lived in a dairy herd for any length of time particularly during the season that animals are closely housed, it has no doubt affected a large majority if not every animal in the herd.

It will therefore be seen from this brief description of the different symptoms which tuberculosis may cause that such symptoms may be indefinite and misleading.

Tuberculin Test.

If space would permit it would be well to describe tuberculin, its way of preparation, how it came to be discovered, etc., but we can state for general information: (a) that it is a sterile substance; (b) that in the dose used for diagnosis purposes it is as harmless as so much sterile water would be injected under the skin, and has no more influence on healthy animals.

The argument is sometimes put forward by persons who are uninformed as to what tuberculin is and who are antagonistic to its use, that it can produce tuberculosis. It would be equally logical to insist that a glass of wine would produce a vineyard in a man's stomach. Tuberculin is not infallible; it errs not in condemning animals that are free from the disease but in the cases it does not detect. When properly prepared, carefully applied and the results capably interpreted and tuberculosis is indicated, we can count with certainty that the animal in question is tuberculous. It may be that the lesions are recent and minute, or deep-seated and obscure.....but they are there if we search far enough for them. These facts have been so thoroughly established that it is not now the custom of officials to mutilate a carcass and destroy its food value simply to locate the lesions. Experience has taught us that it is unnecessary and wasteful.

There are certain conditions which will influence the accuracy of the tuberculin test, but most of these have been discussed so frequently that it would seem unnecessary to repeat them here.

The limitations of tuberculin, however, in our judgment have not been sufficiently discussed from a fair impartial viewpoint.....

In conclusion, the dairyman's text should be:

First, start with a tuberculous free herd.

Second, do not let the feeding of unpasteurized creamery by-products or cattle traffic ruin your undertaking.

Third, if you must purchase cattle use the tuberculin test and remember its limitations.

Fourth, if you have tuberculous animals either destroy them or raise their offspring so that you breed tuberculosis out of your herd.

Fifth, remember that fresh air, sunlight, good care and disinfectants are the factors to be taken into account in building strong bodies and destroying disease-producing organisms.—J. F. Devine in Hoard's Dairyman.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

During the past winter medium-sized dressed chicken to the amount of 5,000,000 pounds have been bought in this country for the British market. They cost here an average of 21 cents a pound and are sold over there by the piece instead of by weight. This poultry has heretofore been secured in Russia and will be again when trading is resumed. Under normal conditions the Russian product is cheaper than ours, and the price will cut a greater figure than ever in Europe when the war is over.

The favorite argument for a cow testing association is that it enables the dairyman to pick out his unprofitable cows. Cows that don't pay their board bills are soon sold and forgotten. The dividend payers are kept, their progeny raised and a reputation raised for them at the same time. It pays to find out what cows to sell, but it is worth more to discover the very best ones to keep.

The egg collecting work of the United States Bureau of Fisheries on the Pacific salmon streams for the season of 1915-16 is over and new records have been established in several fields. The collection to December 31 aggregated more than 288,000,000 divided as follows among the various species: Chinook salmon, 108,087,460; blueback salmon, 104,595,000; Humpback salmon, 31,465,500; silver salmon, 15,371,000; keta salmon, 28,852,000. Some idea of the extent of this work may be gained from the fact that the eggs taken and transferred to the hatcheries, represent more than 2,300 bushels and if placed side by side would extend in an unbroken line for 1,000 miles.

Drs. R. Kraus and B. Barbara, of Buenos Aires, assert that water or milk can be rendered sterile simply and rapidly by simply shaking with animal charcoal and filtering. A 3 per cent. addition of charcoal suffices for milk if it is allowed to stand for fifteen minutes.

The production of 35,316 pounds of butter in seven days by a registered Holstein cow owned by Dr. J. G. Whitney, of Montpelier, Vt., was declared by officers of the Vermont experiment station to be a world's record for a one week test.

Regulations now in force in San Francisco, Cal., will banish all small dairies from the city, it is expected within the coming year. The Board of Health is holding off from granting any more permits for dairies with but a few cows, on the ground that next October the law will go into effect requiring all milk offered for sale to be pasteurized. As the necessary appliances for doing this work cost over $1,000 it is believed the day of the man with a couple of cows who peddles milk around the neighborhood is at an end.

The Sea View Hospital, at Castleton Corners, Staten Island, is trying the experiment of giving goat's milk to 750 tuberculosis patients under treatment in the institution. A herd of thirty-six goats was received from the United States Agricultural Department in Washington.

The southern co-operative cheese factories are becoming more numerous and generally are very successful as indicated by a report sent out by the United States Department of Agriculture. The results obtained in one factory are described in the report, which shows that only $500 was required to begin business. It began operations on January 5, 1915, with 63 gallons of milk. As the farmers became more familiar with the plan milk deliveries increased until one day 195 gallons were turned in for cheese making. During the season 8,992 pounds of cheese was made from 104,990 pounds of milk. This cheese sold for about 17½ cents a pound, which was about two cents more than received by some of the Wisconsin factories. It was shown in this report that in this instance about $300 worth of milk was made into cheese which sold for $1,588.68.

The belief is held by many high authorities that sugar helps to ward off fatigue. Consumed in fairly large quantities it acts rapidly, its full effects being felt about two hours after taking it. Scientific experiments carried out with the aid of the ergograph, an instrument for registering accurately variations of muscular power, show that sugar gives an increase of physical power ranging from 60 to 75 per cent. One of the first observers to draw attention to this virtue of sugar was a Newcastle, England, physician.

Dairy products are being exported from the United States at an unprecedented rate, as a result of the European war demand, ac-

According to the annual export figures for the years 1914 and 1915. An analysis of the figures show an increase in dairy products exports for 1915, of over 456 per cent., as compared with those of the year 1914. The demand for condensed milk for the soldiers is one of the heaviest factors in this increase. The figures regarding refined sugar while not as startling indicate one of the causes for the lift in price of this product to the consumer, for the statistics show an increase in the imports of this product of over 154 per cent., as compared with the corresponding figures for the preceding year.

There were 3,829,398 pounds of camphor, valued at $1,123,630, invoiced at the American consulate at Talhoku, Talwan, for the United States during 1915. Oolong tea was invoiced amounting to 18,234,279 pounds, valued at $3,680,224.

Three times as much condensed milk was exported in 1915 as in 1911, and twice the amount in the last fiscal year as in 1914. Cuba took 8,391,400 pounds, which almost equals the combined sales to all of Europe.

Advices received from Consul General Stanley W. Hollis since the publication of his report on the Syrian olive oil situation in Commerce Report indicate no change for the better. A lack of rain spoiled some of the olives that escaped the locusts, so that the crop was shorter even than at first anticipated.

According to a statement recently issued by the Department of Agriculture the milk production of the United States is valued at $2,320,000,000. This is based on an average price of 20 cents a gallon paid to producers for 11,590,000,000 gallons.

Men in the business estimate that the milk bottle loss to the dealers of the country runs into the millions of dollars a year.

When high records of production by dairy cows are published it is not uncommon to hear some remarks about the gifted liars who adorn the ranks of cattlemen, remarks the National Stockman and Farmer. There was a time when some records were "made" with a greater regard for the reputation of the cow than for accuracy, but that was before the day of official tests. Now the records of great cows are made under the careful supervision of our experiment stations, and all possible care is taken to prevent errors of any kind. There is no reason to doubt records made under such supervision, even if they do far exceed anything in our personal experience. We must remember that these record making cows are given special preparation for their tests, that they are fed all they can digest of the best feeds, that they are milked three or more times a day, and that they are handled with the greatest care. While we do not question the marvelous records made under such circumstances we sometimes doubt the wisdom of subjecting breeding animals to such tests.

ADDRESS BY PROF. CHARLES H. LAWALL, SEVENTH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE FLAVORING EXTRACT MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION OF THE UNITED STATES.

On Thursday, June 29, 1916, Dairy and Food Commissioner James Foust and Prof. Charles H. LaWall, Philadelphia Chemist to the Department, accepted an invitation of the Flavoring Extract Manufacturers' Association of the United States, to be present at their annual convention at the Marlborough-Blenheim Hotel, Atlantic City, N. J., and address them on the subject of the flavoring extract investigation which is now going on in Pennsylvania, the results of which are to be published in the form of a bulletin when the work is completed.

Commissioner Foust was given the privilege of the floor at the afternoon session at 2.30 o'clock and after reviewing in a general way the investigation which is now being made, suggested that Professor LaWall be given an opportunity to lay before the members some instances which the department had encountered in the matter of questionable labels.

Professor LaWall, upon being called, stated that he was aware of the good work that was being done by the Flavoring Extract Manufacturers' Association and that it was only through the co-operative spirit of the members of such organizations that progress could be made. He stated that there were two ways of approaching the matter—one way was to pat the members on the back and tell them things which are self evident or with which they are already familiar. The other was to speak plainly and tell them things which they probably had not thought of and with which they might not at first agree, but which in the end would lead to a better understanding of the subject.

He said that manufacturers of food products in general are yet lacking in that higher type of altruism which prevents them from taking an occasional advantage of each other along the only line still left to them, i. e., the label. He called their attention to the fact that as a general principle it was safer to avoid extreme claims of any kind; that there are claims of a type which may be classed as improbable claims such as "Best in the World," which are no longer accepted as fully as at one time because the purchasing public is becoming more fully informed as to many things in connection with manufactured products.

Truth is sometimes concealed by truth itself, as in the story of the horse which was offered for sale by a man who lived in a community which was entirely surrounded by water. This horse had developed the habit of balking every time the owner attempted to drive him over any one of the bridges leading out of the town. He therefore advertised him for sale with the following truthful statement: "For sale—a horse sound in every respect. Reason for selling, owner wishes to leave town."

Prof. LaWall called attention to the fact frequently overlooked, that the statement "absolutely pure" is not always a true indication of a high grade article for purity and quality are variable attributes, and two products may be equally pure and yet one may be of much higher quality and consequently of much greater value than the other.

The following specific examples of phraseology of labels open to criticism were given in illustration of conditions which ought to be remedied:

1. The use of the word "Compound," which is totally inadequate to convey to the consumer the correct idea of the deviation from the standard strength which is always implied, as in

"Ext. Vanilla Compound."

"Compound Vanilla Flavoring."

"The word compound in very minute and inconspicuous letters, easily overlooked."

"The word compound stamped over another word on the label, so as to make both illegible."

"Compound Extract of Vanilla made from Mexican vanilla bean with the addition of vanillin and coumarin."

"Compound Flavor of Vanillin and Vanilla."

"Compound Extract Orange—oil of orange 0.625, color a trace."

2. The words "synthetic" and "artificial" are sometimes misused, as in

"Made from C. P. Synthetic Oil of Almond," implying some advantage for the preparation over the standard article, due to the facts that the word synthetic is not properly understood and the letters C. P. unintelligible to the ordinary purchaser.

"Artificial Extract of Vanilla."

"Extract of Vanilla, artificially colored, pure vanilla bean in every bottle."

3. The use of complicated and unintelligible percentage statements was criticised. An example was given of a label which had the percentages carried out to the 40th of one per cent. in a way that would be absolutely meaningless as conveying any adequate idea as to the real relation of the article so labeled, to a standard product.

4. The use of expressions indicating an unusual degree of strength which is almost never true, as:

"Highly concentrated."

"Much stronger than extracts usually sold."

"Unrivalled in delicacy, perfect in purity, superior in quality, unequaled in strength."

"Extract of—, double concentrated."

"Concentrated extract of vanilla, made from selected stock."

"Double extract of Lemon."

"Pure Concentrated Extract of Vanilla."

"Pure Concentrated Natural Fruit Extract of Vanilla."

"Pure Concentrated Extract of Vanilla; use $\frac{1}{4}$ less than of any other."

"Stronger, better and cheaper than any goods on the market; $\frac{1}{2}$ the quantity will do the flavoring of other goods on the market."

"Extract of Vanilline—all goods made according to U. S. P. or N. F. formulas. This extract cannot be surpassed in flavor, strength or purity; colored with burnt sugar. We consider this extract superior to extracts made from the vanilla bean."

The use of the word "Imitation" where the article is really almost valueless as to flavoring and which is therefore an incorrect use of the term."

"Almond Flavor, Imitation," in very minute type.

"Vanilla Substitute," with the word "substitute" almost entirely concealed by the shading on the label. The manufacturers of this article, when interviewed on the subject, asked if artistic (?) efforts were not to be approved in designing a label.

6. Freak labels which are manifestly inaccurate probably due to ignorance or error:

"Lemon Extract, $\frac{1}{2}$ strength"; on carton " $\frac{1}{3}$ strength."

"Extract Vanilla, non-alcoholic; double concentrated. Stamped with rubber stamp "Alcoholic."

"Essence of Wintergreen—true fruit."

"Raspberry Extract—made only from the choicest Mexican beans."

"Vanilla Extract; this extract has the flavor of the fresh, ripe fruit."

At the close of Professor LaWall's remarks a number of questions were asked of both him and the Commissioner, which were answered. Mr. Thomas E. Lannen, attorney for the Association, then read paragraphs from the legal opinions sent to the members during the past two years, which showed clearly that if the manufacturers of flavoring extracts followed the advice of their counsel, none of the foregoing examples would have occurred on their labels.

At the conclusion of the discussion the visitors were tendered a rising vote of thanks by the unanimous action of the members present, numbering upwards of fifty.

The foregoing paper by Dr. Charles H. LaWall, of Philadelphia, chemist of the Dairy and Food Commissioner, containing pertinent suggestions to the members of the Extract Makers' convention at Atlantic City, is very timely. Its suggestions should be heeded by all manufacturers of flavoring extracts. If this is done much trouble may be averted and the pathway of those directly concerned is likely to be a great deal smoother than it would be under other conditions.

Extracts of vanilla should be true to name, conforming strictly to the requirements of the United States Pharmacopia in all respects. A substitute for vanilla should be labeled "Imitation Vanilla Flavor." The type should be uniform in size and printed in the same colored ink. The labels of imitation flavors should not contain any deceptive terms, such as "strictly pure," "double strength," "concentrated," "best quality," "Four X," etc. The label should contain a plain statement telling the exact truth about the imitation vanilla flavor, so as to explicitly advise the consuming public as to its real character. A compound should be labeled "Compound of Vanilla," "Kumerin," "Tonka," as the case may be. The type should be uniform in size and prominence and printed in the same color of ink.

The word "extract" should never be used in connection with imitation flavors, neither should the word "pure." If manufacturers of flavoring extracts will take heed to the suggestions of Professor LaWall and the Bulletin and follow them the public will be properly advised, honest manufacturers of pure products will be protected and much possible trouble will be prevented. The Bulletin wishes to aid and protect the honest manufacturer; it is earnestly desirous of bringing to justice the human shark who is preying on the pocket books of the public, regardless of the health of his victims and anxious to put money in his pocket at the expense of the honest manufacturers who adopt and adhere to proper methods, such methods as are prescribed and approved by law.

STANDARDS OF FLAVORING EXTRACTS.

By DR. WILLIAM FREAR.

Address before the National Association of Flavoring Extract Manufacturers, Atlantic City, June 29th, 1916.

Mr. President and Members of the Association:

It was with pleasure that I accepted the invitation of your committee to address you today. If I accomplished nothing more, I could at least express my personal appreciation of the good cheer your enterprise, industry and skill are daily bringing to my living and to that of most Americans. I could spend the entire time allotted to me in speaking upon the value of your service, but your practical committee has given me another subject, one that is probably less appreciable to your care than the voice of appreciation, whose pleasing tunes are all too rare to most of us. If, therefore, what I shall say is less gratifying than I could wish it, please place the blame upon your committee.

I have been requested to speak to you upon the subject, "Standards of Flavoring Extracts." I do not know whether or not I was expected to submit for your present consideration, new proposals, in the nature either of amendments of the existing schedule or of additions thereto. If that was expected, I must disappoint you. The deliberations of the reorganized Committee on Food Definitions and Standards with regard to your products, have not reached such stage of advancement that I could with propriety even suggest any change as in contemplation. Doubtless modifications and additions will be desirable, from time to time. With respect to what may now be desirable, I am much more willing to listen to what you may care to say than I am to make suggestion.

With this limitation upon my speech, what I shall have to say will relate more especially to the need for food standards, the principles upon which they must be based, and the manner of their making.

Of course, there have always been some sort of food standards, that is, more or less definite ideas of the thing to be sold or bought under a given food name. As trade in a given class of food products, such for example as butter, cheese and lard, become well organized, grade classifications were devised for use between maker or producer and wholesaler or retailer, though they have rarely been made known to the ultimate consumer. For reasons you fully understand faulty trade conditions brought into existence a system of state and national food laws.

These laws differed in some particulars, one from the other, but in one respect they were similar. They defined adulteration and misbranding as departures in certain ways from the normals corresponding to food names, but they did not define the normals. They went farther, in that they charged certain officials with the duty of enforcing these laws, and upon those officials the ultimate consumer set a close watch. The burden of making the primary decision as to the nature of the food normal necessarily fell upon the experts guiding the executives' judgment in technical matters.

As one of technical advisers, I felt the job too large for my individual knowledge and experience, and, in 1897, urged upon my American official associates, the need for collaboration. My hope was not merely to secure personal relief from a too great responsibility, but also to protect American trade from the danger and confusion of divided executive judgments, on the one hand and from the alternative expense of securing final decisions upon questions of principle and of detail as well from the court of highest jurisdiction. I found that my technical colleagues were of the same judgment with myself concerning the need of collaboration. The outcome was organized effort and the formulation, after years of study and discussion shared by many, of the existing schedules of food standards, which some of the states have made statutory, and others use as advisory.

Whatever defects and lacks this system of food standards may have, it has the merit of securing a greater practical uniformity in the enforcement of food laws than any other measure that has been tried for that purpose.

If the system had no other value, it would be worth preserving for that use alone. It has, however, the additional value of serving in the absence of definite legal specifications, as a practical guide to the food maker, seller and buyer. It is, moreover, in many respects easier to amend in a consistent, balanced way than a law, and much easier when necessary, to modify with practically universal effect than it is to secure the enactment of an identical amendment by fifty legislatures.

My object in this talk is to make as clear to you as I can in a few minutes, the point of view and the mode of proceeding of those upon whom the duty of drafting those standards fell. If these things are made plain to you, your suggestions of improvement will doubtless be more perfectly adapted to the existing precedents than if the whole theory were confused and obscure. If you are already familiar with these more general matters, I must ask your indulgence for making the foundations sure before I touch upon that part of the superstructure in which you are especially interested.

The task involved the consideration of two properties of each food product, its kind and its quality. As to its kind, it was needful to distinguish the product from each other kind, and to define the generally accepted name in such way as to make the distinctions the people ordinarily make between the product under consideration and all other food substances. As these definitions were for use in enforcing the food laws, it was needful that they be made with due care that they might not serve instead to defeat the objects of these laws by giving the stamp of official approval to substitutes or to impoverished, undesirably associated, contaminated or gravely inferior products. It was true that the public had with long patience accepted many variations and imitations under the names of the normals. They had been too busy plowing and sowing and reaping to watch with guns on their shoulders the line fences of their trade words. Consequently, there were many, many cases in which the name used by the seller fooled them into buying something different from that which they expected. On the other hand, there were also cases in which they had come to understand that they could not find with ease that which the name they used would from its old meanings imply, but that they would always receive a quite unvarying something else. When the name thus diverted by the seller came to be clearly understood and used in the same sense by the buyer as well, the new meaning was confirmed. Here etymology, or root meanings of words, could not form the actual intelligent usage that must be sought and expressed for standard purposes.

People have said, what is the need for all this new work? Are not the dictionary definitions authority, and suitable for the purposes of the laws? If that is the question in your own mind, all I ask is that you study the best dictionary you can find with this question before you: Would I be willing to risk my product against the imitation of others, or my liberty if need be, on the completeness of these dictionary definitions? I think you will agree that for scientific and legal terms dictionary definitions are more precise than they are for food terms.

In the execution of their task, those responsible for the standard definitions must naturally play safe for the people as a whole, rather than for a small group. There would be a tendency to disregard new expansions of name meanings and to sharpen the customary distinctions, where they were not wholly clear. On the whole, however, I hope it may be the final opinion that those who drafted the standards did a good practical job, even if it was not entirely perfect. If, as the result, you find you have to be more particular about the names you apply to your products, you have had the satisfaction of realizing that this was true also of every other engaged in the same business. There was a day, though I hope it is fully passed when those who had long succeeded in selling one thing under the name of another, rather strongly protested against compulsory change in practice and claimed a right to continue to defraud because they had done it for so long. But imagine how utterly insufficient would have been all the words in the language to have expressed their feelings if they had been further required to make good to their customers the cost differences between the real and the imitation articles together with compound interest.

There remains for brief consideration, the policy with respect to the quality within the same kind of product. In theory it was comparatively easy to decide, as the food laws indicate, that dirty, rotten or spoiled foods and those from diseased materials should be excluded from the scope of a definition and standard. It was also fairly clear that a thing so poor that not only the buyer but all his neighbors would think he had been cheated, if the article had been sold him without clear warning of its inferiority, should be excluded. But if the product was sound, sold under its kind name, and not too inferior, it was equally clear that the vendor should not be fined or imprisoned for selling it. The application of these guiding principles resulted in the standards being what are termed "minimum standards."

At this point, however, a difference in treatment between natural products and manufactured articles was urged. It was said that nature determined the character and quality of the former, but human choice and skill accounted for the latter and should have no limitation. It was urged with equal vigor that man can not easily control the former, but can determine almost at will the strength or concentration and composition of the latter; therefore, there should be no limits for the natural product, but only for the manufactured. I am willing that producer and manufacturer debate the subject on these lines as long as they find gratification in the exercise.

As a food analyst, I found that the last applied to both natural and manufactured products, and that the people had come to expect rather definite things to be delivered when bought under certain names. Here was the compass which must guide the standard makers' steps.

It must, however, be conceded that, as a class, manufactured preparations offered the greater difficulty of decision as to the points through which the minimum line was to pass, although some of the simple substances, such as salt and sugar, for example, were easily limited. In other cases, such as that of sweetened condensed milk, there was comparatively narrow divergence in the concentration of the manufactured product.

With regard to flavoring extracts, matters were not so simple. Still the character of the distinctions required was more or less fully indicated by the great volume of public criticism relative to certain phases of the trade developments in these products. It was obvious, also, from the uses to which they were put, that they must not only themselves be characterized by the flavors corresponding to their several names, but they must carry the flavoring bodies in such concentration that a relatively small volume would suffice to impart the distributive flavor quite perceptibly to a large mass of the food in whose preparation they were employed.

These facts, together with the historic facts as to the origin of these preparations, led to the adoption as a primary proposal of the concentrations stated in the Pharmacopeia and National Formulary for the flavoring preparations made by dissolving essential oils in alcohol and for other similar preparations not there named; and also for vanilla extract. This primary proposal was followed up by direct test, though not of the broadest range, of extracts made from pure essential oils, and also by submission of the proposals to the trade and to food experts for suggestion. The majority of opinions expressed were favorable to the proposals, so far as concentration is concerned. Under the circumstances, the denunciation of the concentration proposals as "arbitrary" is hardly justifiable, it seems to me, in view of the deliberation and wide consultation with which the decision was reached; although the indication of any particular concentration out of the wide range possible was, of course, "arbitrary" in the sense that it was a matter of judgment, just as the fixing of the gold content of the legal gold dollar is arbitrary. As a matter of common sense, the limit had to be somewhere between the points at which, on the one hand, a drop must be split to avoid over-flavoring the food, and, on the other, so much dilute flavor must be used that the cost of its bottle and of its distribution far outran the market value of the material itself. You will well recall the criticisms of a decade ago that arose from the use of the descriptive terms "concentrated extract," "double strength," or "triple extract," for flavoring preparations of the mildest character.

If the tendencies toward over-dilution were discouraged by the concentration standards adopted, steps were taken at the same time to protect you in the quality of your raw materials by fixing standards for the essential oils. It is true that the then existing chemical methods were not entirely suited to the task, and that the limits used for many of the oils were not based directly upon the quantity present of the chief flavoring constituent. With the perception of the need for improvement in methods and in the detailed study of these interesting plant products, has come a great addition to the delicacy of our methods and to our knowledge.

You will recall also that the schedule of standards for flavoring extracts gave distinct recognition to preparations of the so-called "terpenless" class, for which there appeared to be a distinct use, and thus cleared away some of the difficulties which previously beset the path of even the best of such preparations. On the other hand, nothing at all was expressed concerning the wholly artificial ester products used to imitate fruit flavors.

If you will consider the range of possible imitations—some more, some less successful—and the various characters of their composition, you will at once perceive why this "sea of difficulties" was avoided. Indeed, then the sign "imitation" is hung on the package, poison—and, in all fairness, I should add that I do not know if the buyer ought to be regarded as well warned against anything but many imitations that deserve the use of that strong word.

If the incomplete sketch thus hastily drawn has helped to make clearer to you some of the more important considerations leading to the present standards for flavoring extracts, I shall be gratified. It may, I trust, serve, at least, as the starting point for constructive criticism. They are of human workmanship and should, therefore, be capable of improvement. There are new products which probably should be added to the list of preparations defined. I shall hope to profit more from your discussion of the subject than I may expect you to have gained from this highly generalized opening.

THE LINTHICUM RESOLUTION.

The oleo interests are still "fiddling away" on the Linthicum Resolution. At the hearing before the Rules Committee in April last, it was pretty evident that Mr. Linthicum's resolution, based on a lot of technicalities, which meant one thing in the laboratory and another thing in the dairies and creameries, would not get very far before a Committee of Rules in the lower house of Congress, composed of some of the ablest men in that body. This committee could not help seeing that the report of 1912, given out by the Bureau of Animal Industry, was trying as they stated in their report for national inspection of creameries, which would mean the expenditure of anywhere from $4,000,000 to $10,000,000 annually for inspectors. Notwithstanding the fact that this great army of inspectors could only reach that part of the dairy products which go into interstate shipments, and never reach the great bulk of dairy products consumed within the borders of the States in which they are produced. Had the national government started on this inspection business with a number of inspectors ranging anywhere from 4,000 to 10,000 what a lot of experts with fat jobs these would have been. Some of these inspectors, no doubt, would be on a par with some of the experts sent out from one of our eastern cities, where one inspector was 22 years of age, had never lived in the country, nor worked on a dairy farm, had spent 10 to 15 days at a dairy school; was then permitted to go out to condemn farms, and he condemned about everything he saw. The second inspector was 21 years old, never lived on a farm, or worked in a dairy, and after one day's instruction from the 22-year-old inspector, who didn't know anything, was sent out to inspect dairy farms.

Compare such a system of inspection with the State inspection, where the Dairy Commissioner is a man that has had long training, and selected his inspectors on the records they have made as practical dairymen or creamerymen, and the difference is so great and the results obtained so far superior that no one would pretend to make comparisons.

The report of the Bureau of Animal Industry for 1912, on which the Linthicum Resolution is based, was ordered made in April, 1912, and was completed June 30th of the same year, and ordered published November 19, 1912, by the then Secretary of Agriculture, Hon. James Wilson.

The two inspectors doing the work had score cards containing 13 questions—a rather unlucky number. To these questions the answer had to be "yes" or "no." This reminds one of a teacher who was out of patience with one of her pupils. She was about to inflict punishment, but she thought she would give him one more chance. She called him up and asked him: "Who was Henry the Fourth? Answer yes or no." Of the 13 questions referred to, 10 of them were on a par with the above. Only 3 of the 13 questions had to do with the cleanliness and the purity of the product of the creamery, or the cream-buying station, but each one of the 13 questions took 7 and a fraction points off of the hundred, and it is no wonder that only 5½% of the creameries and cream-buying stations came up to this standard.

Of course, everyone agrees that the report never should have been put out by the Department of Agriculture, without explanation. For example, cream was marked insanitary that had .02% acidity, when everyone knows that butter churned from sour cream has over 4% acidity. This cream was marked "insanitary," and by an additional twist the Linthicum Resolution has led the public to believe that "insanitary" means "unwholesome."

To make a long story short, the Linthicum Resolution reminds one of a time clock, and the real object of it is not to investigate the dairies and creameries, but to act as a check on the consideration of any oleomargarine legislation by Congress. And this is all done from pure patriotism, according to Congressman Linthicum's statement.

PROSECUTIONS ORDERED DURING THE MONTH OF JUNE.

The number of prosecutions ordered during the month of June was 117, falling short of the number ordered during May, 67 cases. Perhaps a day will come in the history of Pennsylvania when everybody will be good for an entire month and not a single prosecution will be ordered. But so long as men will violate the food laws prosecutions must be ordered. The cases were as follows:

One prosecution was ordered under the ice cream act. It was for the sale of "strawberry ice," artificially colored and flavored; it contained no strawberry. This offense was committed in Allegheny county.

A single prosecution was ordered under the lard act. This was instituted in Philadelphia and the offense consisted in the sale of an artificial lard for pure lard.

In the city of Philadelphia three prosecutions were begun for violation of the oleomargarine act. These were for peddling packages of oleomargarine from wagon, said packages not having been properly marked as oleomargarine.

Philadelphia also witnessed the beginning of 22 prosecutions for violation of the non-alcoholic drinks act. One of these was for the sale of ginger ale containing saccharin; one for the sale of Jamaica ginger which was deficient in ginger; one for the sale of lemon soda containing saccharin; two for the sale of raspberry soda artificially colored and flavored and containing saccharin; one for the sale of strawberry soda artificially colored and flavored in imitation of cherry, also containing no strawberry; one for the sale of pear soda artificially colored and flavored and containing no pear; three for the sale of cherry soda artificially colored and flavored and containing no cherry; six for the sale of raspberry soda artificially colored and flavored and containing no raspberry; six for the sale of strawberry soda artificially colored and flavored and containing no strawberry.

Under the provisions of the pure food law 28 prosecutions were ordered during the month. They were as follows: One for selling as salad oil a misbranded article containing one-third mineral oil; one for selling sauer kraut that was badly fly blown and unfit for food purposes; one for the sale of dried peaches unfit for food purposes; one for the sale of chocolate candy babies coated with a dark colored shellac; one for the sale of candy fudge coated with a resinous glaze; one for the sale of orange extract misbranded, low in oil of orange and colored with tumeric in imitation of a high grade extract; one for the sale of vanilla extract low in vanilla resins; two for the sale of vanilla extract misbranded; an imitation extract artificially colored; four for the sale of vanilla extract misbranded. Should be labeled "substitute," of "imitation." Six for the sale of goat meat as mutton; nine for the sale of maraschino cherries containing added sulphur dioxide. The offenses for which these prosecutions were ordered occurred in Allegheny, Crawford, Erie, Philadelphia, Venango, Warren and Westmoreland counties.

Sixty-two prosecutions were ordered for violation of the cream and milk act. The offenses for which punishment is now asked were committed in Allegheny, Butler, Cameron, Clarion, Clinton, Dauphin, Elk, Jefferson, Lancaster, Northampton, Perry, Wayne and Westmoreland counties. Of these six were for the sale of cream low in butter-fat; two for the sale of skimmed milk containing added water; one for the sale of milk containing formaldehyde; one for the sale of milk low in fats and solids, skimmed and watered; three for the sale of milk low in fats and solids, containing added water; seventeen for the sale of milk low in fats and solids and skimmed thirty-two for the sale of milk low in fats and solids.

A DECADE OF THE FEDERAL FOOD AND DRUG ACT.

The New York Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin of a recent date contained a symposium in which various writers expressed their views concerning the merits and defects of the Federal Food and Drugs Act, which became a law on June 30, 1906, and has now been in operation for ten years. The following contains the views of Dairy and Food Commissioner James Foust, of Pennsylvania:

I find it difficult to separate, sharply, the effects of this law, itself, and those of the long and vigorous publicity campaign which led to its final enactment. During this campaign, made possible only by the free, public-spirited assistance of the press, the people of the States were strongly roused to the wide-spread abuses that existed and to the increasing menace.

In 1897, barely a dozen states had enacted general food laws; by 1906, few states were without such laws. Practically all these laws conformed to the general type of the proposed national act. Thereby the campaign for an interstate food and drug commerce law secured substantially uniform requirements with respect to foods, which would have been of great value to both the bogus and the honest maker and dealer in these commodities, even though the national food and drug act, itself, had failed of passage.

This campaign and the passage of the national act, moreover, encouraged the strong, true men of the trade and led to the organizing of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association and to the organization of active and efficient state associations, and also to the strong development of far-sighted, efficient bodies interested in particular growths of products, such as the National Canners' Association. In my survey of changes for good effected in the food business, since 1900, the strong aid of these influential organizations cannot, in justice, be overlooked.

The national law, itself, is a compromise, with the weaknesses and, no doubt, some of the wisdoms of the compromise. As a means for the direct suppression of the use in commercial foods of deleterious substances, it has proved weak when brought to the test of Supreme Court construction. It ought not to be necessary that the people should have to bear the burden of proof now required under the national act before a food manufacturer can be restrained from adding, for his own commercial advantage, new substances, possibly deleterious to the health of his customers, until such substance shall have been tested by competent public authority and certified to be harmless. But this is what is now required by the present wording of the national act, and it is not only necessary to prove that the added ingredient is deleterious or poisonous, but that, in the quantity used, the product containing it is so affected thereby that it may itself be injurious to health; and even such undesirable additions may be used externally as preservatives if "the preservative is necessarily removed mechanically by "maceration in water."

The phrasing of the corresponding clause of the Pennsylvania food law is far better, declaring a food to be adulterated "if it contains any added substance or ingredient which is poisonous or deleterious to health"—which prohibits the introduction of such material in any quantity under the opinion of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania in Commonwealth vs. Kevin. This wording should be substituted for the present language of the national act.

The obscurities of the clause exempting foods bearing "distinctive names," as this term has been construed in the opinion of Attorney General Wickersham, and of the definition of the term "blend," which is wide in the scope of its effect, are unfortunate.

The provision for a board of regulation, composed of three cabinet officers, of whom two must be chiefly occupied with other affairs, could well be replaced by giving one competent, broad-gauged man the power and holding him responsible.

Notwithstanding the limits imposed by the weaknesses above mentioned, the enforcement of the national law has caused the disappearance from interstate food trade of a host of bad products.

Strengthened by the Shorley amendment, the law has wrought a revolution in the patent medicine business, and is rapidly driving the dangerous frauds out of existence.

I would respectfully urge, if the Federal courts would rely less upon much restricted publicity and a nominal fine to arouse the fear of the evil-doer, and would, now that the law's requirements are generally understood, impose the full penalty of the law upon old and daring offenders even more could be accomplished.

Yours truly,

JAMES FOUST,
Dairy and Food Commissioner.

PROGRESS IN THE MAINE SARDINE CANNERIES.

The following letter from H. M. Loomis, director of inspection of the sardine industry of Maine, with the accompanying rules and regulations is self-explanatory:

Hon. James Foust, Dairy and Food Commissioner,
Harrisburg, Pa.

Dear Mr. Foust:

Mr. Gorrell, Secretary of this Association, has written me regarding a published interview which appeared in the Journal of Commerce, May 2, and he has asked me to write you my views in regard to the matter which you discuss therein.

As Mr. Gorrell has probably told you, the Association is now trying out an experiment of maintaining an inspection system in connection with the Maine sardine canneries. The majority of the canners have become members of this Association, and have pledged themselves to pack only sound fish, and to bring their factories into proper condition to meet the sanitary requirements laid down by the Association.

I take pleasure in enclosing herewith a copy of the requirements which have been issued for the present canning season.

If this inspection plan is a success, and the packers will hold together, and back up the Association in its efforts, I have no doubt that the same plan or a similar one will be extended to other canned goods industries.

Almost without exception the canners have shown a spirit of co-operation, and have gone to considerable expense in meeting the Association's requirements, and the prospects therefore appear very encouraging.

Yours respectfully,

H. M. LOOMIS,
Director of Inspection.

Preliminary Requirements for Opening of Sardine Canning Season.

1. The walls should be thoroughly cleaned and painted or white-washed.

2. The floors should be thoroughly scraped and scrubbed until clean. They should be made tight to prevent accumulation of dirt in cracks and to make it possible to keep them clean. Packing tables, machinery and all utensils should be thoroughly washed or cleaned.

3. Separate toilets should be provided for each sex. The floors should be tight so that they can be readily cleaned. Unless provided with a flushing system, they should be separate from the cannery. They should be screened, well-lighted and ventilated. Sanitary toilet paper should be provided.

4. Adequate lavatories adjacent to the toilets should be provided, with soap and clean towels.

5. Suitable provisions should be made for the removal of refuse daily and to secure proper drainage in connection with the cannery.

Requirements During Canning Season.

1. Canners should see that the requirements contained in the circular letter of April 8th, addressed to the fishermen and boatmen are lived up to, covering the quality of the fish.

2. Canners should see that the fish boats bringing fish to the canneries are kept clean and sanitary and provided with tight tanks.

3. When fish are brought from a considerable distance, the last fish out of the boat being in poorer condition, should be packed first, assuming of course that they are suitable for packing.

4. The pickling brine should be changed daily or after each operation.

5. The flakes should be clean. A pair of revolving brushes and cleansing powder, consisting of a mixture of carbonate of soda with a little caustic soda are suggested for this purpose.

6. The racks should be scrubbed often enough to be kept clean.

7. Steam boxes and dryers should be kept clean.

8. Flaking machines and other machinery should be cleaned daily or after each operation.

9. Tables should be washed clean daily or after each operation. In case of wooden tables, the tops should be free from cracks and preferably of hard wood.

10. The pans should be kept clean. They should not be stacked on top of each other in such a way that the bottom of the pan can come in contact with fish in the cans below.

11. Fry baskets should be kept as clean as possible.

12. "Mush" pans should be emptied and cleaned daily or after each operation.

13. The water in bath tanks should be changed daily or after each operation.

14. The floors should be cleaned daily or after each operation.

15. The toilets should be provided with sanitary toilet paper and should be kept clean.

16. The lavatories should be kept clean and provided with soap, clean towels and running water. They should be separate from, but near the toilets.

17. The hands and nails of employes handling fish should be kept clean. Employes should wash their hands before beginning work and after leaving the toilet.

18. The employes should wear washable clothing or aprons and change them frequently. Women should wear caps over their hair.

19. Spitting on the walls or floors of the canneries should be prohibited. Cuspidors should be provided, if necessary, and should be kept clean. The use of tobacco by employes should be discouraged in the canneries.

20. The cans in which the fish are packed should be clean and should be stored in such a manner as to avoid contamination. The filled cans should be cleaned before packing for shipment.

Director of Inspection.

SOME SPECIFIC POINTS IN WHICH PHARMACISTS COME INTO CONTACT WITH THE FOOD LAWS.

By PROF. CHARLES H. LaWALL.

Several years ago I presented a short article at one of the local branch meetings of the A. Ph. A., entitled "Laws Other Than Pharmacy Laws Which Affect Pharmacists." At that time only general statements were made regarding possibilities of violations, but it seems necessary to go more thoroughly into particulars as conditions are becoming so complex that the pharmacist may be an innocent offender of some law of which the authorities do not accept ignorance as extenuation or as diminishing the penalty imposed.

It is assumed, of course, that pharmacists know the difference in applicability between national and State laws, the national laws applying only to interstate commerce, the State laws having to do only with offenders within the borders of the State itself.

It is my purpose to take up more particularly the State laws, as they are the ones whose enforcement is along lines particularly applicable to some of the products handled and sold by pharmacists. The national laws and some of the State laws as well, are general in their scope and one must understand, interpret and apply general definitions of what constitutes an adulteration or other violation of the law. Some of the State laws, however, are specific and set forth in language intelligible even to the layman, the standards to which a product must conform to be legal in all respects.

The first of these laws is the milk and cream law which provides that milk shall contain not less than 3.25% of fat and 12% total solids, while cream must contain not less than 18% of fat, and that both shall be free from preservatives and coloring matter of any kind. Under this law, a pharmacist, who uses milk or cream at his soda fountain as many do, must conform to the requirements regarding these products and the use of either skimmed milk or evaporated milk in the place of milk or cream respectively, in drinks when these products are called for by name, as in "Egg and milk" or "Vanilla cream soda," is illegal and punishable by a minimum fine of $25 and costs.

The non-alcoholic drinks act is another in which the pharmacist comes into close touch with the law. This act prohibits all preservatives, except sodium benzoate, by name, prohibits the use of artificial sweeteners and provides in a misbranding clause that no deception shall be practiced regarding the name or character of the product sold. Under this law, vanilla soda may not be flavored with coumarin nor the artificial fruit flavors be used without notifying the purchaser in some adequate manner that the drink dispensed is not true to name. The minimum fine is $25 under this act.

The ice cream act, which also affects many pharmacists, provides that ice cream, to be legal, must have not less than 6% of fat in fruit and nut flavors and not less than 8% in all other flavors. All preservatives and artificial sweeteners are prohibited but the use of gums or gelatin in amounts not exceeding 3% or of harmless coloring materials, when not used for purposes of deception, is permitted. The minimum fine is also $25 under this act.

The fresh egg act affects the pharmacist of course, but not in such a marked degree, as he does not sell eggs in the shell and when he encounters a bad one in the preparation of a drink, it is presumed that he throws it away. This law prohibits the sale, under any circumstances, of eggs unfit for food unless they have been previously denatured by breaking the shell and impregnating the contents with kerosene. The stringency of this act may be better understood when it is realized that bad eggs may be readily separated from good eggs in the whole condition, without breaking the shell, by the operation of candling. The minimum fine under this act is $200.

The fruit syrup act, which dates from 1905, a year before the passage of the national law and one of the oldest of the food acts now in force in Pennsylvania, is one in which the quality of fruit syrups, such as are used in flavoring soda water, is specifically regulated by the prohibition by name of all the preservatives commonly used, excepting sodium benzoate. Coal tar dyes are also prohibited absolutely, and this brings about the anomalous condition in connection with the "Non-Alcoholic Drinks Act," that a fruit syrup colored with coal tar color is illegal if sold as a syrup, no matter whether the presence of the color is declared on the label or not, while after diluting with carbonated water the beverage is legal if the declaration of artificial coloration is made. The minimum fine is $60. It would seem as though there was a necessity for legislative amendment to bring these two acts into harmony.

The oleomargarine act should not affect pharmacists, but with the increasing number of lunch counter soda fountains, it may be well to mention that there is no law which is more stringently enforced. If oleomargarine is used in place of butter, placards, issued by the Dairy and Food Commissioner, calling attention prominently to the fact that "oleomargarine is served" must be conspicuously placed so as to be plainly visible to the persons served. When it is realized that the amount of material spread thinly on a sandwich suffices for the identification of oleomargarine and its differentiation from butter and that the minimum fine is $100, it will be realized that it is dangerous and expensive to take a chance, as some do.

It is under the general food act of 1909, however, that most of the possibilities come. It is true that the standards of the U. S. P. apply to the substances ordinarily sold by the pharmacist, but it must be remembered that this true only when the articles are "professedly sold for medicinal purposes," and there are many things sold by pharmacists which come directly under the food laws because they are sold for food purposes. The minimum fine of $60 under this act applies to all of the following:

Take gelatin, for instance. The national law permits the presence of sulphur dioxide in unlimited amounts, but the Pennsylvania State law prohibits it altogether. The manufacturers of gelatin sold in package form for food purposes, sell a special sulphur dioxide free article in Pennsylvania, but the bulk sheet gelatin, usually imported, which the pharmacist handles and frequently sells for food purposes, usually contains appreciable amounts of sulphur dioxide and is nearly always illegal in this State.

Spices have usually been of higher quality in the past, as sold by the pharmacist than as sold by grocers, but the rigid enforcement of both national and State food laws has so raised the quality of spices that even the cheapest package now sold in the groceries contains pure spice. The pharmacist no longer has the advantage of former days in this respect and the spices sold by him must conform to the present stringent requirements of purity.

But it is in flavoring extracts that the greatest amount of misunderstanding is likely to arise. Vanilla extract must conform in character to a product made essentially by the U. S. P. process. Of course, cheaper and lower grade extracts are made from cheaper beans and by reducing the alcohol somewhat, but if the alcohol is reduced below a certain point (about 50% in the original menstruum), the amount of vanilla resins extracted from the bean is diminished to a point where the extract is illegal. The addition of tonka, vanillin, coumarin or caramel makes it necessary to label the extract thus made as "Imitation Vanilla" or "Imitation Vanilla Flavor," with all the words displayed with equal prominence. It will not do to label the article "Compound Tincture of Vanilla," even though that name is recognized by the National Formulary, nor will it be legal to label the article "Extract of Vanilline" or in any other misleading way that will lead a careless purchaser or an uneducated person to believe that the article is Extract of Vanilla.

If the pharmacist dispenses for a flavoring extract the spirit of almond of the U. S. P., he violates the food law, because the U. S. P. spirit of almond is a medicinal preparation containing prussic acid, while the food standards require flavoring extracts of almond to be made from an oil which has been deprived of its prussic acid.

In confectionery, which the pharmacist sometimes handles in bulk, he must be certain that what he sells for licorice candy contains licorice and is not simply flavored with anise and colored with lamp-black, that what he sells for cocoanut bonbons are not cereal bonbons loaded with starch, that goods called by the name chocolate really contain chocolate and not one of the numerous trade substitutes, that the jelly beans and eggs are free from the superficial coating of talc which they sometimes have, and that glossy candies, fudge, for instance, do not owe that gloss to shellac or lac, as it is called.

The manufacturers of these cheap grades of confectionery take care to properly designate these facts upon the package containing the article, so that in case of prosecution there is no redress from him; the information must be carried on to the purchaser, to make the sale of any such articles legal. Thus we see candy which looks like licorice labeled on the bulk container "These goods are colored black and flavored with anise and contain no licorice," the bonbons are labeled "Cocoanut cereal bonbons," the chocolate appearing candy is labeled and billed as "Brown caramels" or in some other careful manner to avoid the use of the word chocolate, and the glossy candy is labeled "Glazed with lac."

There are a number of other articles which the pharmacist sells that are likely to contain sulphur dioxide, which is illegal in everything except molasses and dried fruits, and even then it must be declared to the purchaser. I have in mind the so-called cocktail cherries used in topping sundaes and fancy drinks; also lime juice and clam bouillon. In all of these the Federal law permits sulphur dioxide and the packages therefore may contain a declaration of the presence of the preservative. This is no defense or extenuation under the Pennsylvania law, but is contributory evidence of the illegality of the product and there is no defense possible in such cases for the prohibition is specific in the law. The same conditions apply to glace fruits sold either in bulk or in the original package.

The pure food act also applies to meat extracts which are sometimes sold as pure when they have been made from corned beef liquor and contain saltpetre and excessive amounts of salt.

It also applies to coffee, which I have noticed as being sold in package form in some few stores.

There are doubtless other instances which I do not at present recall in which the pharmacist is likely to violate the food laws, but I think I have given enough detailed cases to make it clear that the pharmacist who does not inform himself fully on this subject is walking over a concealed mine and is likely at any moment to be brought into unpleasant prominence as a violator of the food laws, to say nothing of the financial cost of paying a fine, the smallest of which would eat up the profits of many months sales on the article in question.

INFANTILE SCURVY AND PASTEURIZED MILK.

In the discussion of Dr. Funk's interesting paper on "Vitamines, a New Factor in Nutrition," recently read before the Academy of Medicine, Dr. L. Emmet Holt expressed the conviction that infantile scurvy was undoubtedly on the increase and that the increase was due to the exclusive use of pasteurized milk in the artificial feeding of infants.

That this conclusion is probably correct is indicated by the interesting clinical observation reported by Dr. Alfred Hess at the same meeting. Hess found that a mild grade of scurvy developed in a group of infants artificially fed on pasteurized milk and barley water, while a control group to whose diet orange water was added, but who otherwise received the same milk modifications as the other group, remained entirely free from scurvy. In the first group the scorbutic symptoms promptly disappeared on the administration of orange juice.

The Department of Health is deeply interested in these papers and in the discussion they have provoked. It does not understand them to constitute a disapproval of pasteurization of milk in New York City, but rather to be a warning concerning the temporary disabilities which are produced by the exclusive use of pasteurized milk in infants. To conclude that the enactment of a pasteurization ordinance was ill-advised would indeed be unwarranted. In this connection it must be remembered that most of the cases of infantile scurvy now being encountered are of a mild type; so mild, in fact, that many of them escape recognition even at the hands of experienced physicians. Moreover, the dangers of milk borne diseases are real, and constantly carry with them a grave menace to life through tuberculosis, typhoid fever, septic sore throat, diphtheria and other infectious diseases.

In contrast to this we have a mild grade of scurvy which can readily be prevented or cured by the addition of a little orange juice to the diet. Furthermore, a safe raw milk (guaranteed or certified) is available for those cases which pasteurized milk even with the addition of simple antiscorbutics does not meet the requirements. Such cases are extremely rare.

Instructions have been given by the Department of Health to the physicians and nurses in charge of its milk stations and of the baby welfare work in the homes to be on the alert for any of the early signs of scurvy and to insist upon the use of orange juice or other suitable antiscorbutics when babies are exclusively bottle-fed on pasteurized milk.

While the Department of Health has no intention, therefore, of altering its policy with regard to pasteurization, physicians may rest assured that it likewise does not contemplate or look with favor upon any administration of milk control in any community, which eliminates the privilege of securing a safe high grade raw milk for those whose lives may depend upon its use.—N. Y. City Department of Health.

ADVOCATES A MILK TRUST.

In an address which he delivered before the members of the Food and Home Economics committee of the Philadelphia Civic club, a milk trust as a step to obtain pure milk at reasonable prices was advocated by Dr. Henry Leffman, professor of chemistry at the Woman's Medical College, of Philadelphia. Dr. Leffman, who was a member of the Rayburn Milk Commission, said:

"Under present methods an attempt to obtain pure milk would boost the price of milk to 12 cents a quart. Good milk must be paid for, but in figuring our balance against the extra cost occasioned by doctor bills which would be thus partially eliminated.

"Milk is a great cultural medium of germs. Microbes grow in milk in great abundance. A disease germ can grow with greater rapidity in milk than in any other food. Milk is often infected from what is known as walking typhoid fever. When milk gets above a certain temperature the microbes multiply at a swift rate. They can do harm by changing the chemical composition of the milk and by overloading the system with more microbes than it can cast off.

"Supervision of the milk supply should extend from the condition of the animal to the health of all those collecting and handling the milk, and to seeing that the milk never gets above a certain temperature until delivered. Some scientific control must be provided.

"In view of these conditions I believe that the production and marketing of milk should only be in the hands of large corporations. Each corporation should have monopoly of a district, and no dairy farm should distribute milk and no retail dealer handle it independent of this control.

"This centralized control of the milk supply, which can more easily be supervised, alone can give a chance for the elaborate precautions necessary to safeguard health. The production of milk as it is now, is one of the most dangerous of human endeavors. The farmers look upon the advanced methods as an attempt by the city man to take their livelihood from them and hygienic methods make slow progress.

In view of the fact that disease germs have no respect for political boundaries, I believe that the supervision can only be satisfactorily accomplished by Federal laws, to the entire suppression of state and city control, except in so far as these subsidiary jurisdictions may desire to establish and enforce higher standards."

CANNED EGGS.

Canning eggs is now made thoroughly practical and will soon be a market article. The plan originated with an Indianapolis poultry dealer, who has tested it out for a year with satisfactory results. The eggs are like hardboiled eggs except that they are in a solid mass shaped like the can and are sliced up for use like a meat roll or other table edibles. The eggs are broken and six placed in each can. The cans are sealed and placed in steam just as any other products are canned, and this process boils the eggs and makes them fit to keep fresh till opened. It is expected that the canned eggs will find a big demand for war purposes, mining camps and commissaries and other consuming outlets when fresh eggs are high in price.

MILK THE IDEAL FOOD.

Milk is used to stimulate soldiers before they go into the battle, is the latest report of its value as a food. The Pasteur Institute in Paris has found that milk is not only a helpful food, but one of the most powerful stimulants known. The way that this discovery was made was in part accidental and in part deliberate. A large number of puppies were being treated with various drugs to find the relative difference between them in the way of improving the ability of the animals to work in a miniature tread-mill.

All the medicines, such as caffein, strichnine, digitalis, quinine and a long list of other drugs were given and their energy, power, endurance and strength were measured. The puppies thus tested were found to exhibit varying degrees of vitality and strength under the influence of the drugs given, but were sooner or later more exhausted than when given none of the drug stimulants.

One of the investigators observed that three of the puppies that seemed to have an instinctive dislike to meat broth, candies and bread had been fed almost exclusively on cow's milk and seemed to be growing faster and also more active and muscular and less liable to falling immediately asleep than the others. He called his colleagues' attention to this. At first they were loth to attribute the superior energy of these three puppies to the milk.

One of the physicians determined to secretly give half of the dogs a half saucer of milk before they were set to their daily work. The puppies which were given the milk performed their work with a dash and form three times greater than the other puppies, were less exhausted and more playful after their work and did this irrespective of the particular drug which was given them beforehand. Moreover, it was found from that time on that the puppies were more attentive and alert when put to their task. All of the dogs were tried in this way and it was found that milk showed a slowing of the pulse, strengthened the heart and muscles, toned up the whole animal and acted as an undoubted stimulant of the most efficacious sort.

Milk itself has the qualities of a true elixir of life. It contains sugar, minerals, oils, fats, albumens, starches and water. These are the foods necessary to man.

It also seems to contain the power of not only whipping up the living tissue but holding them pleasantly to the task without the subsequent reaction and collapse so usual with strichnine, quinine, ergot and other artificial stimulants. Furthermore drugs set up bad habits and also send up blood pressure, whereas milk is a vital tonic, an essential food, and the sort of a tonic that leaves no traces of harm behind. It is worth noting that the French government, realizing this has notified all cafes to push the sale of milk as a beverage superior to coffee, tea, cocoa and all other soft drinks.

THE DEBT WE OWE THE COW.

Little do we realize the debt we owe the cow. During the dark ages of savagery and barbarism, we find her early ancestors natives of the wild forests of the old world. As the bright rays of civilization penetrated the darkness of that early period and man called upon the cow she came forth from her seclusion to share in the efforts that gave us a greater nation and a more enlightened people. For two thousand years she has shown her allegiance to man, sharing alike in his prosperity and adversity, responding nobly to all that was done for her until through her development she became an idol of the people of her native country.

In 1492, when Columbus made his second voyage to America, the cow came with him—and from that time to the present day she has been a most potent factor in making this our own country, the greatest nation with the highest type of womanhood and manhood history has ever known.

Her sons helped till the soil of our ancestors and slowly moved the products of the farm to market. They went with man into the dense forests of the new world, helped clear them for homes, and made cultivation possible for the coming generation and when the tide of emigration turned westward, they hauled the belongings of the pioneer over the sun-scorched plains and over the great mountain ranges to new homes beyond.

CREAM GRADING AND A HIGHER QUALITY OF CREAM.

Dairy educators and dairy officials are giving a great deal of attention nowadays to the subject of grading cream. The dairy press has discussed the question from all angles. Many people in urging the grading of cream base their whole argument on the paying of different prices for different grades of cream, using arbitrary standards of one kind or another as a basis.

We believe that it is a sound principle to pay less for poor cream than for good cream. We don't believe that any grading system not founded on this principle can be a success.

The mistake many people make in urging a difference in the price between good and poor cream is that they think the creamery can pay several cents more per pound of butterfat for good cream, under a grading system than the creamery may now be paying for all the cream they receive.

In urging the general grading of cream some people claim that the producer of good cream gets no more for his product than the producer of poor cream. This is true to a certain extent with most cream markets, but it is not entirely true.

Even though both get the same price for butterfat the one is getting far more money out of his cows than the other. The farmer who cleans his separator after each skimming gets more butterfat because a dirty separator cannot skim clean, and an unclean separator makes poor cream. By employing the right kind of temperatures in skimming his milk and in holding his cream on the farm and by being clean about the dairy he prevents loss and has more butterfat to sell.

An unclean separator means that the cream screw becomes partly clogged up so that a portion of the butterfat goes into the skim milk. A farmer who does not keep his separator and milk utensils clean is usually careless about the temperature at which he separates the milk and in separating milk below 85 degrees there is apt to be a great loss of butterfat in the skimming.

The farmer who does all these things right and as they should be done gets more pounds of butterfat and in this way he actually gets greater returns from his cows.

It is unclean separators and utensils and a general lack of proper handling that makes the cream poor in quality, and worth less on the market. Cleanly habits and proper conveniences give the farmer pride in his business, he usually has a cream tank in which to hold his cream and he keeps better cows and takes better care of them. These things all make for success in the business.

The terms "good cream" and "poor cream" are relative. When cream is wholesome and will make butter that the consumer is glad to pay the very highest market price for we believe that it can very properly be called "good cream." If it will not make that kind of butter and must go into a grade of butter that brings several cents less on the market then we believe it can very properly be called "poor cream." It should be paid for on a lower basis. We do not however believe that any grading system should be used by the creamery as an excuse for buying good cream at a low price. The producer's interests must be kept in mind.—Blue Valley Bulletin.

WHAT A GROCER SHOULD BE.

There may be such a man as the mythical grocer which is described in the following from the pen of Dr. Frank Crane, of Chicago. However it is a typical conception of what a grocer ought to be and it is passed along in the hope that some may profit by it.

Our grocer knows his business. He knows the best part of his business, which is cultivating the friendship of his customers.

His store is as neat as a pin. There is no trash on the floor. His shelves are attractively arranged. He keeps the place looking like an exhibit at a fair all the time.

His clerks do not wear dirty aprons.

They are all polite. He had a grouch face once, but fired him the second day.

When you come into the store somebody always greets you. If all the clerks are busy one of them will excuse himself for a moment to his customers, speak to you and ask you to pardon delay, to look around and see if you fancy anything, and you will be waited on as soon as possible. You are not ignored and made to feel that you have intruded somewhere you are not wanted.

When a clerk writes down your order it is in duplicate and you are asked to look over the list and verify it.

If the eggs are not above reproach, if the butter is not sweet, if anything he sends you is unsatisfactory he is glad to have you return it. He'd rather lose a sale than a customer.

While he is accommodating in his dealings, he is strict about payments.

On his monthly statements is printed a note saying: "This is a grocery store. It is not a bank. We would like to do anything to please you, except lend you money. To extend your credit over a month is the same as lending you money. Don't ask us. Bills are payable monthly, and if not paid by the 10th credit will be discontinued."

He does not care for customers who are slow pay.

He has a special telephone where a special clerk looks after regular customers. For instance, he will call up Mrs. Jones and say:

"How did you like that cheese we sent you Saturday? Yes? We are anxious to get reports from our customers on that cheese. Thank you. Pleased that you like it. We have some extra fine melons this morning. Shall we save you half a dozen?" And so on.

This is plain jollyng. But it pays.

He keeps right after us. Every week he mails us a little leaflet list of specialties and bargains.

He impresses his delivery clerk with the price. And there is but one price. No haggling. Take it or leave it.

When any one of his clerks promises to deliver your order by 10 A. M., the goods are at your home at 10 A. M. If not you are telephoned and an apology offered.

Our grocer realizes the importance of being dependable.

He keeps his word.

He tells the truth.

He is punctual, prompt, clean and agreeable.

THE SOLIDS AS STANDARD OF PURITY OF MILK.

The following article by Charles H. Kilbourne appeared in a recent issue of the Creamery and Milk Plant Monthly:

For many years the chemists who have examined milk for its constituents have found a wide variation in the milk from different breeds of cattle. Also there are variations in the different strains of the same breeds. The period of lactation has also an influence upon the percentages of the various constituents. The varying conditions of feeding cause a variation in the proportion of fat to solids, etc.

It has been found, however, by many investigators that the part of the milk which varies the least is the solids not fat. Frequently it is found that the fat and solids will be above the standard while the solids not fat will be below the usual or normal amount. Chemists have recognized that milk of this character was probably adulterated.

In spite of these facts, however, it is true that where milk standards have been adopted by those in public authority, it has been the water. The total solids, and the fat whose proportions have been fixed by law, instead of the solids not fat.

Some authorities, however, have endeavored to fix by law a standard for solids not fat and have enforced this standard with varying degrees of success.

It seems to be evident that some legal standard for the solids not fat should be adopted. It is within the knowledge of the writer that in the years when the legal standards for milk solids in New York City was 12 per cent. analysis of samples then taken showed that the solids not fat were usually above 8.50 and that when the city standard was reduced to 11.50 per cent. of solids in conformity with the State law, the solids not fat dropped perceptibly.

An examination of the reports made by the Canadian government showing the quality of the milk sold in the different provinces of Canada indicates without exception the solids not fat is well above 8.50. The samples reported by the chemists making the examinations were taken from milk offered for sale in the market and were not samples taken from herds where the purity of the milk was unquestioned. The samples include much milk which was undoubtedly adulterated.

An examination of the reports made monthly by one of the southern cities reveals that the solids not fat are frequently as high as 9.2 and are never below 8.50, excepting in samples which are undoubtedly adulterated. It is therefore evident that it is possible to obtain milk of a standard as high as that fixed by the New York Board of Health and it is held by them that unless some reasonable standard is fixed the tendency will be for the producers to attempt to introduce into their herds cows which will yield greater and greater quantities of milk largely at the expense of the solids contained therein. One method of keeping the milk up to a high standard which seems to be the most reasonable and logical would be for the milk dealers to pay for the milk in accordance with solids not fat contained therein. Many dealers at the present time are buying milk on the butterfat basis, paying a premium for milk which contains over a certain amount of butterfat. It would seem to be entirely feasible to make the price paid to the dairymen dependent upon, not only the butterfat contained in the milk but also upon the solids not fat, a premium being paid upon all milk which contained over 8.50 per cent. This would induce the dairymen to introduce into their herds breeds or strains which would bring up the average percentage of their solids and would also tend to discourage the adulteration which is undoubtedly still being carried on by many dairymen, especially at points where milk is still purchased by weight or by measure.

It is undoubtedly possible to adulterate milk of a high quality by the addition of water, so that it will still be above the legal standard for butterfat and solids. In such cases, however, the solids not fat will be below the standard fixed by law.

This method of securing the desired results would produce less friction and would seem to be the most natural and reasonable method to pursue. There are various items which now enter into the price paid to the dairymen including beside the item of butterfat also the question of cooling the milk, the question of bacterial content and the question of bringing the milk to the creamery before a certain time in the morning. The addition of one more item to the factors which influence the price should not be difficult and should be productive of good results.

CLEAN FOOD SHOPS COMING.

The food officials of many States are giving attention to the sanitary condition of country and city grocery stores according to the officials engaged in the enforcement of the Federal Food and Drugs Act, who recently have investigated the matter. The country store is both a collecting and distributing agency of foods. It sells foods of many kinds to the farmers and at the same time buys from them for shipment to the city, butter, eggs, fruits, vegetables, poultry and other products of the farm. If the shelves and counters are laden with dust, if cobwebs hang in every nook and corner, if flies, bugs and vermin inhabit the place, the food products are certain to be more or less contaminated, and likely to become dangerous to health. The reports from various State officials indicate that many stores have been found in the past to be in such condition.

A clean, light, well ventilated store attracts customers, and the progressive merchant needs no other incentive to keep his floor, shelves and counters spotlessly clean, which includes screening from flies and the elimination of all other insects. Some storekeepers seem to require prodding from food and health officials to induce them to maintain that degree of cleanliness which will insure that the food they handle will be free from contamination. Some of the States have effective sanitary laws which require frequent inspection of all establishments where food stuffs are put up, manufactured or kept for sale. Other States depend upon the general provisions of the pure food laws which require that foods be free from contamination. A few of the States lack either a law that will reach the unclean store nuisance, or means for enforcing the law.

State food and health officials have used various means to control effectively the sanitary conditions of places where food is sold. One of the most effective means that has been employed is that of securing the co-operation of women's clubs and civic associations. When a delegation of women customers calls upon a merchant and suggests that he clean up, he is compelled to put his store in good condition and to keep it so. When the grocerymen in a town find that a large portion of the housekeepers are buying only from the cleanest stores, there arises a wholesome form of competition. A food inspector can, under even the best conditions inspect a store but a few times a year because of the number he has to visit. The customers come every day, however and when they act as unofficial sanitary inspectors, the merchant with the unclean store cannot escape detection and punishment in loss of trade.

Competition in cleanness has been secured in one State by means of colored placards which the inspector gives the merchants who keep their stores in a sanitary condition. A store in excellent condition gets a large white placard, one in fine condition gets a blue placard and one in good condition gets a red placard. The store that falls below the latter grading gets no card. The proprietors are permitted to keep the placards displayed in a conspicuous place as long as the store is kept in the condition represented.

There is keen competition among the merchants to get and keep the best placards. The buying public knows what the different colored placards signify, and are particularly partial to the white placard stores. Other States have adopted a score card system similar to that used in grading dairies. The inspector scores each store where food stuffs are sold according to certain points indicated on an inspection card. The scores are made public through the local press or by means of bulletins or circulars.

The sanitary condition of stores is subject to State or local control. The Federal Food and Drugs act has no jurisdiction over such matters, except as to foods and drugs sold in the District of Columbia, territories and insular possessions, which are under the direct control of the Federal government. However if food becomes contaminated in an unsanitary store or in any other manner and is afterward shipped in inter-state commerce, the party responsible for the shipment may be prosecuted under the Federal law, and the contaminated food may be seized.

PROMOTION.

By EDGAR A. GUEST. (In Ford Times).

Promotion comes to him who sticks,
Unto his work and never kicks,
Who watches neither clock nor sun
To tell him when his task is done;
Who toils not by a stated chart,
Defining to a jot his part,
But gladly does a little more Than he's remunerated for.
The man in factory or shop
Who rises quickly to the top
Is he who gives what can't be bought:
Intelligent and careful thought.

No one can say just when begins
The service that promotion wins,
Or when it ends; 'tis not defined
By certain hours or any kind
Of system that has been devised,
Merit cannot be systemized.
It is at work when it's at play,
It serves each minute of the day;
'Tis always at its post, to see
New ways of help and use to be.
Merit from duty never slinks,
Its cardinal virtue is—it thinks.

Promotion comes to him who tries
Not solely for a selfish prize,
But day by day and year by year
Holds his employer's interests dear.
Who measures not by what he earns
The sum of labor he returns,
Nor counts his day of toiling through
Till he's done all that he can do.
His strength is not of muscle bred,
But of the heart and of the head.
The man who would the top attain,
Must demonstrate he has a brain.

POSTERS AND GOATS.

All goats delight to take a bite
Of posters on a fence,
Both night and day they chew away
With appetites immense.

So all wise guys who advertise
By posters will do well
To place them where the goats are rare
In subway and on "L."—Fame.

"Goats rare in subway and on 'L' "?
Ha, ha, likewise, hee, hee;
Without the herds of close-packed goats
Those railroads wouldn't be.

THE BUSINESS SMILE.

The thing that goes the farthest towards Making life worth while,
That costs the least and does the most
Is just a pleasant smile,
The smile that bubbles from a heart
That loves its fellowmen,
Will drive away the cloud of gloom
And coax the sun again,
It's full of worth and goodness, too,
With manly kindness blent—
It's worth a million dollars,
And doesn't cost a cent.

A TRAINED CITIZENRY.

To arms! To arms, ye stalwarts;
From cities, towns and farms,
The shovel take,
The hoe, the rake,
And train yourselves to arms!

The carpets must be swatted,
And gardens must we dig,
We'll chase the hen
Like valient men,
And the marauding pig!

Down with the dandelion!
And swat the dang'rous fly;
Alive he'll spread
The germs, and dead,
Invade the currant pie!

The bats of our forefathers
We'll take down from the wall,
Their shades we'll show
That we still know,
The way to hit the ball!

THE CUTTER.

By CLIFTON S. WADY.

He studied the Word, and then he said:
"Let the ax be laid to the root of the tree."

And the tree by chance was his own good "plant,"
But he made a hit at the proper slant.

And the chips fell far, as such chips do,
And some struck me, and some struck you;

But the thrifty "plant," once fair to see,
Lies low, in the Land-of-the-used-to-be;

And the cutter, he of the sturdy whacks,
Who swung the blade of the gleaming ax—

Where is he now, who hewed his way?
You only shake your head and say:

"Under the grass and the silent dew
We buried him, after the job was through."

And the marble reads, in a gothic free:

FROZEN AND DRIED EGGS.

The frozen and dried egg industry, states a publication of the Department of Agriculture, is a permanent one because it meets a distinct economic need. Many eggs which could not stand long shipment may be preserved as wholesome food by freezing them out of the shell or by drying. In the beginning, however, there was a natural popular prejudice against the business which was increased by the ignorance and carelessness of some of the pioneers. It was under these conditions that the Department of Agriculture undertook a study of the problem in order to lay a groundwork for a scientific preparation of an extremely perishable product.

The eggs commonly used by reputable firms are small or oversized eggs and dirty and cracked or skrunken eggs. They are not to be confused with eggs that are unfit for human use, such as the classes known as black, white, mixed and sour rots, green whites, eggs with stuck yolks, musty and mouldy eggs, blood rings, etc. These should be rejected entirely or else used for tanning purposes only. Eggs with a bad odor should be rejected absolutely.

Careful handling before the eggs go to the breaking room is one of the principal points of great importance. Careful handling is not only necessary to prevent the use of unfit eggs, but it will also prevent the waste of a number of perfectly good eggs which might otherwise be rejected. In order to insure that the eggs are well candled, some system is recommended by which the work of individual candlers may be checked. Eggs found difficult to grade should be set aside by regular candlers for examination by an expert. Furthermore, the eggs should be graded again when out of the shell, for certain kinds of infection can only be detected when the eggs have been broken. When grading eggs out of the shell only two grades should be recognized—food eggs and tanner's eggs.

While it is desirable, from a financial standpoint, that the breakers should work with rapidity, too much speed is not to be desired because of the danger that unfit eggs may be included with the good ones before the breaker can detect the difference. When this happens no attempt should be made to save the good eggs. In practice it has been found that in order to prevent waste and to insure good grading, no more than three eggs should be broken into a cup before it is emptied. It was also found that from twelve to sixteen eggs a minute is as rapid work as can be done satisfactorily. Even this is not possible if the breakers are permitted to talk or their attention is distracted from their work in other ways.

The necessity for separate rooms for candling, chilling, breaking freezing and drying is emphasized. Each room should be maintained at a definite temperature by artificial refrigeration. A room for washing and sterilizing the utensils should adjoin the breaking room.

EDUCATING THE PUBLIC IN THE BUYING OF FOOD.

The following article from the pen of Dr. H. E. Barnard, Food Commissioner of Indiana, is taken from The American Food Manufacturer:

Before the food manufacturer ships a pound of his product he may profitably ponder long over the fact that he is selling the least discriminating, least skilled buyers of any market. When a man makes bolts he knows that the purchasing agent of the firm to which he sells them will insist that they are made from the right kind of metal—that they are milled right, that they are sold at a reasonable price. But when a man sells breakfast food he goes up against the great unknown, the whim and fancy of a public that must eat to live but that never, in a school or out of it, has learned how to eat.

There are exceptions of course. A fortunate few find wives who have been taught dietetics in a cooking school or who have mastered the intricacies of a family budget before venturing upon the business of housekeeping; some women read the scientific journals that so admirably discuss nutrition and its allied subjects, and many more enjoy the pages of the popular magazines and along with the gentle art of embroidery learn something about fancy cooking and occasionally read a well phrased article on good housekeeping. But the canner, baker, grocer who has food to sell must remember that it is the favored and fortunate few who are either trained in school or taught by scientific or even popular journals, and that the great mass of consumers limits its reading to the daily paper.

I believe in the educational value of club work. The leagues of consumers who study marketing and who learn how to buy by careful study are a great help. Unfortunately again club work and study reaches comparatively few women, it never gets down to the class that most needs instruction.

If the buyer for the home, the mother and housekeeper, is to be taught better how to buy and what to buy she must be taught indirectly by the daily paper, or directly by her grocer or the manufacturer who has something to sell her, and who tells her about it by demonstrators or readable circulars. In other words the educational material must come into the homes. It is all very well to use the electric sign to advertise tobacco for men see the signs—but how many mothers of families get down town where the light blaze out the virtues of ketchup, coffee and breakfast foods?

In any campaign of education intended to inform the public how to buy food the main attack must be centered on the mother of the family, who buys ninety-five per cent. of the food, and not on the father who reads the signs on the street cars on his way to work or the bill boards that flash past him on his travels. Of course there is some value in suggesting new foods to any member of the family group about the dinner table, but unless the suggestion is finally made to the buyer who visits the grocer it will amount to little.

My idea then of education in food buying is first—to popularize interest in food by well written simple stories in the daily paper. There is news in the story of a loaf of baker's bread, in the canning of peas and tomatoes, in the growth and preparation of tropical foods, that should be told along with the movies, business and politics.

Second, the public must be taught to trust its food, not fear it. Unfortunately most food publicity has been destructive, writers on food subjects covet the sensational side, they talk with glee about food adulteration, they point an accusing finger at the scarlet letter on the breast of convicted manufacturers, they relate dreadful stories of rotten eggs, embalmed beef, polluted oysters, plaster of paris bread, diseased milk and leave their readers undecided whether it is better to die of starvation or food poisoning. Such publicity is as outrageous as it is false. The public hears only of the bad one per cent. and never realizes that ninety-nine per cent. of the food supply is pure, wholesome, well made and well handled. That is the real story—that is the vital fact in all talk of food and nutrition. The public will get over its fear of the food supply and again trust the manufacturer who is supplying it with nutritious, appetizing foods at reasonable prices, but it will only do so when the daily paper wakes up to the fact that fear of food does a hundred times more damage than bad food and that a constructive rather than a destructive policy should determine its discussions of all food problems.

Third, more stress should be laid on nutritive values, honest values. The average family is well fed because out of the abundance that loads the table each member chooses without knowing why, such amount of the various fats, starches and proteins as are necessary. But this is hardly enough. It isn't always true and it isn't always expensive. If the cook knew more about food values she could use the materials more easily and more economically.

The giving of this instruction may well be undertaken by the manufacturer who furnished the food. There is a good and logical argument for the use of every sort of food. That reason should be honestly, strongly but not extravagantly emphasized. Fourth, and finally, food buyers must wake up to the fact that the family fortunes rest in their hands. Extravagant food habits and ignorant buying mean poverty and probably at the same time poor feeding. Careful intelligent buying means better food for less money and stretches the weekly wage so successfully that a surplus for the savings bank is assured.

When the manufacturer by sane education makes the surplus possible instead of spending his energies in reducing it by fostering food fads and foolish buying, he will put the finances of the home on a safe basis and at the same time build his own business on solid rock.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

The oleomargarine output for the Chicago district in a recent month exceeded 10,000,000 pounds. With the raise in butter prices the demand for oleomargarine increases.

Articles labeled "egg powder" must actually contain powdered egg and no other ingredient, according to a decision of the Bureau of Chemistry. If the article contain other ingredients besides powdered egg it must be so stated on the label. The bureau also holds that an article labeled "egg substitute" must possess the properties of an egg. Each manufacturer will have to do his own experimental work, without the assistance of the Bureau of Chemistry, if he wishes to determine whether the article will accomplish the results claimed for it.

The Russian government recently shipped from New York 744,000 pounds of butter which is believed to be the largest single shipment of butter ever made.

Sixty cents a dozen for eggs does not seem so much in comparison with the price received by an Orange, N. J., woman, which was $12,000 a dozen. However she had only one egg to sell, which was a roc's egg, and only three of these birds are to be found in this country in museums. The egg was sold to the Denver Museum.

Tillie Alcarta, a Holstein-Friesian cow, owned by a dairy company in Yolo county, Cal., the holder of one year's record in milk production, has completed a test which gave her the world's record for two years' production. Her figure for the two years is 60,278 pounds. While making this record Tillie produced as high as 50 quarts of commercial milk a day. The earning power of this cow during the year was approximately $1,000 considering the milk to have a value of 8 cents a quart and deducting the value of her feed.

A bill has been introduced in the New York State legislature to exempt creameries, condensaries, shipping stations and all concerns handling milk from the requirements of the one day in seven rest law.

Ventilation of barns is usually more difficult than window space and to this lack of proper ventilation veterinarians attribute, in a large measure, the prevalence of tuberculosis. But aside from safeguarding the health of both the owner's family and his cattle, good ventilation is economy. Perfect assimilation of food is no more possible in the body of an animal without a sufficient supply of air than is perfect combustion of fuel in a furnace with the draft closed.

According to latest advices by way of London the Austrian Central committee for the supply of fat has been asked repeatedly to allow the the use of fats and oils to pharmacists for the preparation of ointments, linaments, etc., also cod liver oil which is hourly wanted in Austrian pharmacies. In order to know whether it would be possible to meet with these requests steps have been taken to find out the quantities of fats and oils in stock and estimate what quantities are likely to be required.

In the past decade the consumption of chocolate and cocoa in the United States has much more than doubled. This country is the world's largest consumer. In 1900 there was but $19,000,000 worth of crude cocoa imported into this country, while in 1915 the total amounted to $31,000,000.

In the twelve months ended March 31, American Beet Sugar accumulated net profits of $3,174,830 the first time net has ever reached $3,000,000. It is understood that the company sold approximately 170,000,000 pounds of sugar, in which event the average profit per pound was 1.87 cents as compared with 81 cents in 1915 and .28 cents in 1914.

The American people, long known as the world's coffee drinkers, actually consume 40 per cent. of the amount sold in the international markets according to figures issued by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. More than 1,000,000,000 pounds of coffee came to this country last year. Coffee imports show that the approximate per capita consumption in the United States is ten pounds, tea seven pounds and cocoa one and two-thirds pounds.

Three-fourths of the coffee consumed in the United States comes from Brazil and nearly all the remainder from Latin-America. Japanese tea is the American favorite, supplying nearly half of the amount consumed. The Dominican Republic leads all countries as a seller of cocoa to the United States.

A new record has been established by the United States Bureau of Fisheries up to March 1, 1916, in its fish cultural operations of the present fiscal year. During this period the actual distribution of fish of all species in the various fields of activity shows an increase of approximately 800,000,000 over the distribution during the same period of 1915. This would indicate that the output for the entire year will exceed the record output of 4,288,757,000 fish and eggs for the year 1915, and will probably reach 5,000,000,000 or more.

The addition of saponin to food mixtures which are sold for use in the place of white of eggs is regarded by the Bureau of Chemistry of the Department of Agriculture as constituting adulteration within the meaning of the Food and Drugs act. The practice is usually adopted for the purpose of concealing inferiority and that therefore it comes within the definition of adulteration. Saponin is used extensively in so-called substitutes for white of eggs for the purpose of producing foam and thus giving the articles a fictitious appearance of body and therefore of food value.

Following the ruling of the Federal Pure Food Authorities the Kansas Pure Food Board has voted that henceforth no sale of eggs shall be legal if 5 per cent. or over of the eggs are decomposed to such an extent that they are unfit for food. The farmer is liable to prosecution if he sells eggs to the merchant, which upon handling prove to be over 5 per cent. bad. The merchant in turn is liable if he sells such eggs to a customer or to an egg packing concern.

The value of food packed annually by canners of the United States is approximately $275,000,000. The greatest problem which the canners have to face is the cost of distribution, which cost is about 75 per cent. more than the total value of the food and it is the question of reducing that cost that causes the canners the greatest trouble.

The California Central creameries have been awarded a contract for supplying 700,000 pounds of butter to the United States government. In the entire country but seven distributors bid for the contract.

Canned seeded raisins are one of the latest developments in food. A considerable number have already been shipped but the canning is still being experimented with in California in order to overcome the possibilities of sugaring and drying out.

Buttermilk is a beverage which deserves every encouragement, especially as a hot weather drink. Most of the fatty elements are removed in the process of making butter, but a number of other valuable nutritive qualities are left when the buttermilk is taken with other foods. Thus buttermilk contains a certain amount of casein, which will enable one to make a most satisfying meal of a glass of buttermilk plus a small amount of meat and potatoes. It also has an excess of lactic bacteria, the foes of nearly all the harmful germs in our digestive systems, which give it a slightly laxative quality.

Robert M. Allen, chief of the division of foods at the State experiment station of Kentucky has a word to say in his last annual report that should be read by every buyer of foods. He places the annual waste of foods in this country at not less than $1,000,000,000. This is not waste by the consumer in the household but waste in markets, storage places and shops and other places where food is handled and sold. Mr. Allen states that the deteriorated food products are sold to the consumer by some dealers as long as it will pass muster and then goes to the dump. The loss from insanitary killings in abattoirs amounts to $60,000,000 annually. The figures give some idea of the economic loss to the country of wastes in the production and distribution of food products. When these are added the losses from spoilage of foods in the homes through bad cooking, unsanitary conditions and careless handling of food products the annual food waste is probably far beyond $1,000,000,000.

ATTENTION

Is there a man or woman in the community who has the heart to risk the health and life of the innocent with bad milk, impure food, or through avoidable filth and flies,

The number of children slaughtered annually by preventable diseases amounts to thousands! Let us stop the sacrifice!

SOME FACTS

Twenty-five per cent. of the babies born in the civilized world die in the first year. Great for civilization, Eh! Most of the deaths are due to bowel complaints caused by impure milk for which the dairymen, milk sellers and sometimes the consumers are responsible. Those who recover, often are left with a weakness.

"Little Boy of the Sunshine."
My mamma's crazy over fresh, sweet, clean, pure, modified milk with only $3\frac{1}{2}$ to 4 per cent butter fat. That's why I am an all around athlete at fifteen months.

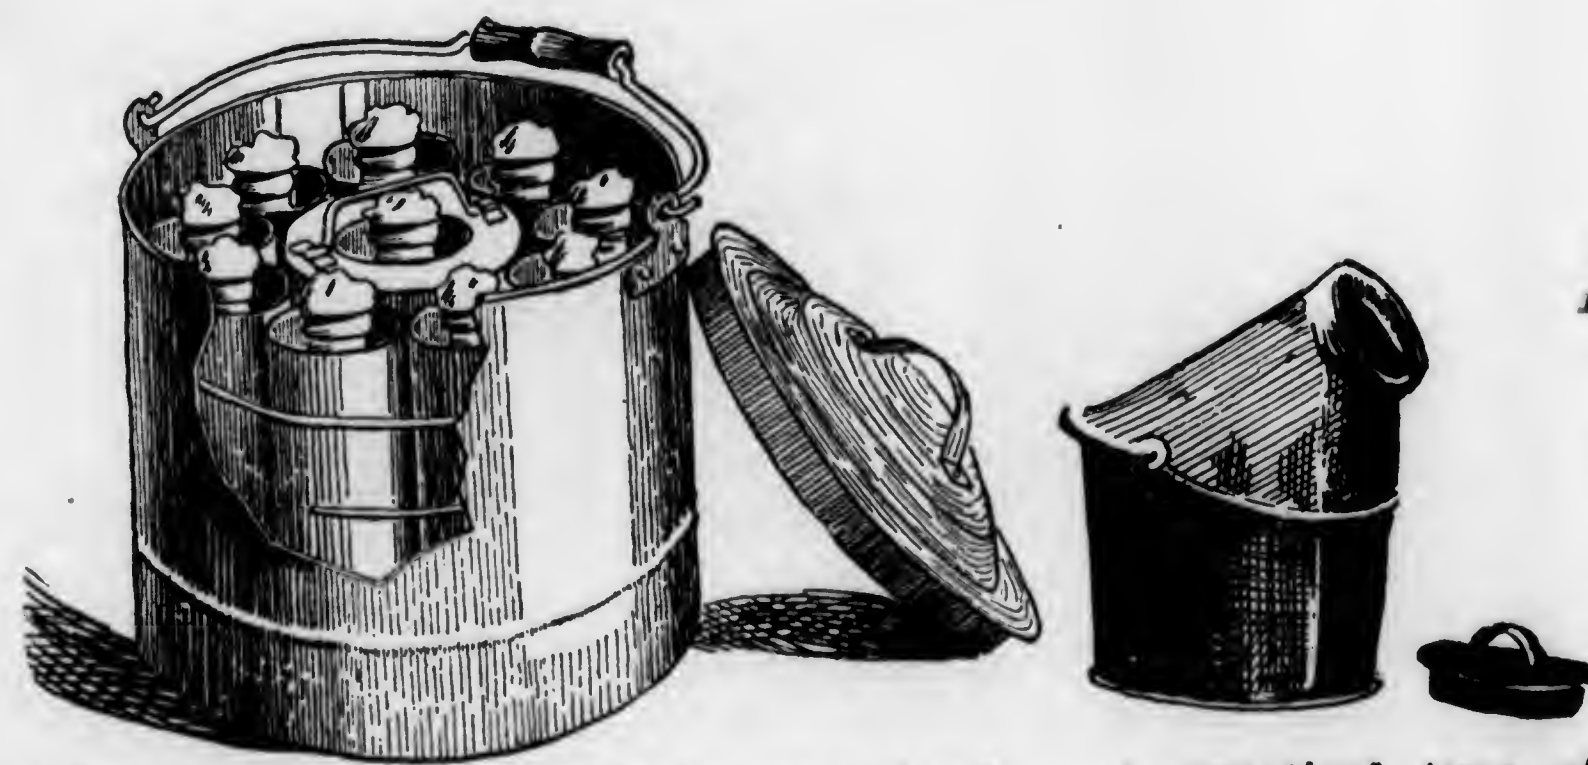

THE PRODUCTION AND DISPENSING OF MILK.

Every milk man can do what this man does and it will pay him. See the convex cover of his can. It overhangs the rim of the can mouth and dust germs fall from it. If you are producing milk imitate such a man in his work.

CLARIFYING.

Clarifying milk means to rid it of udder waste, pus germs, foreign and impure matter by special centrifugal machinery. You must have the best apparatus and should buy none without seeing demonstration.

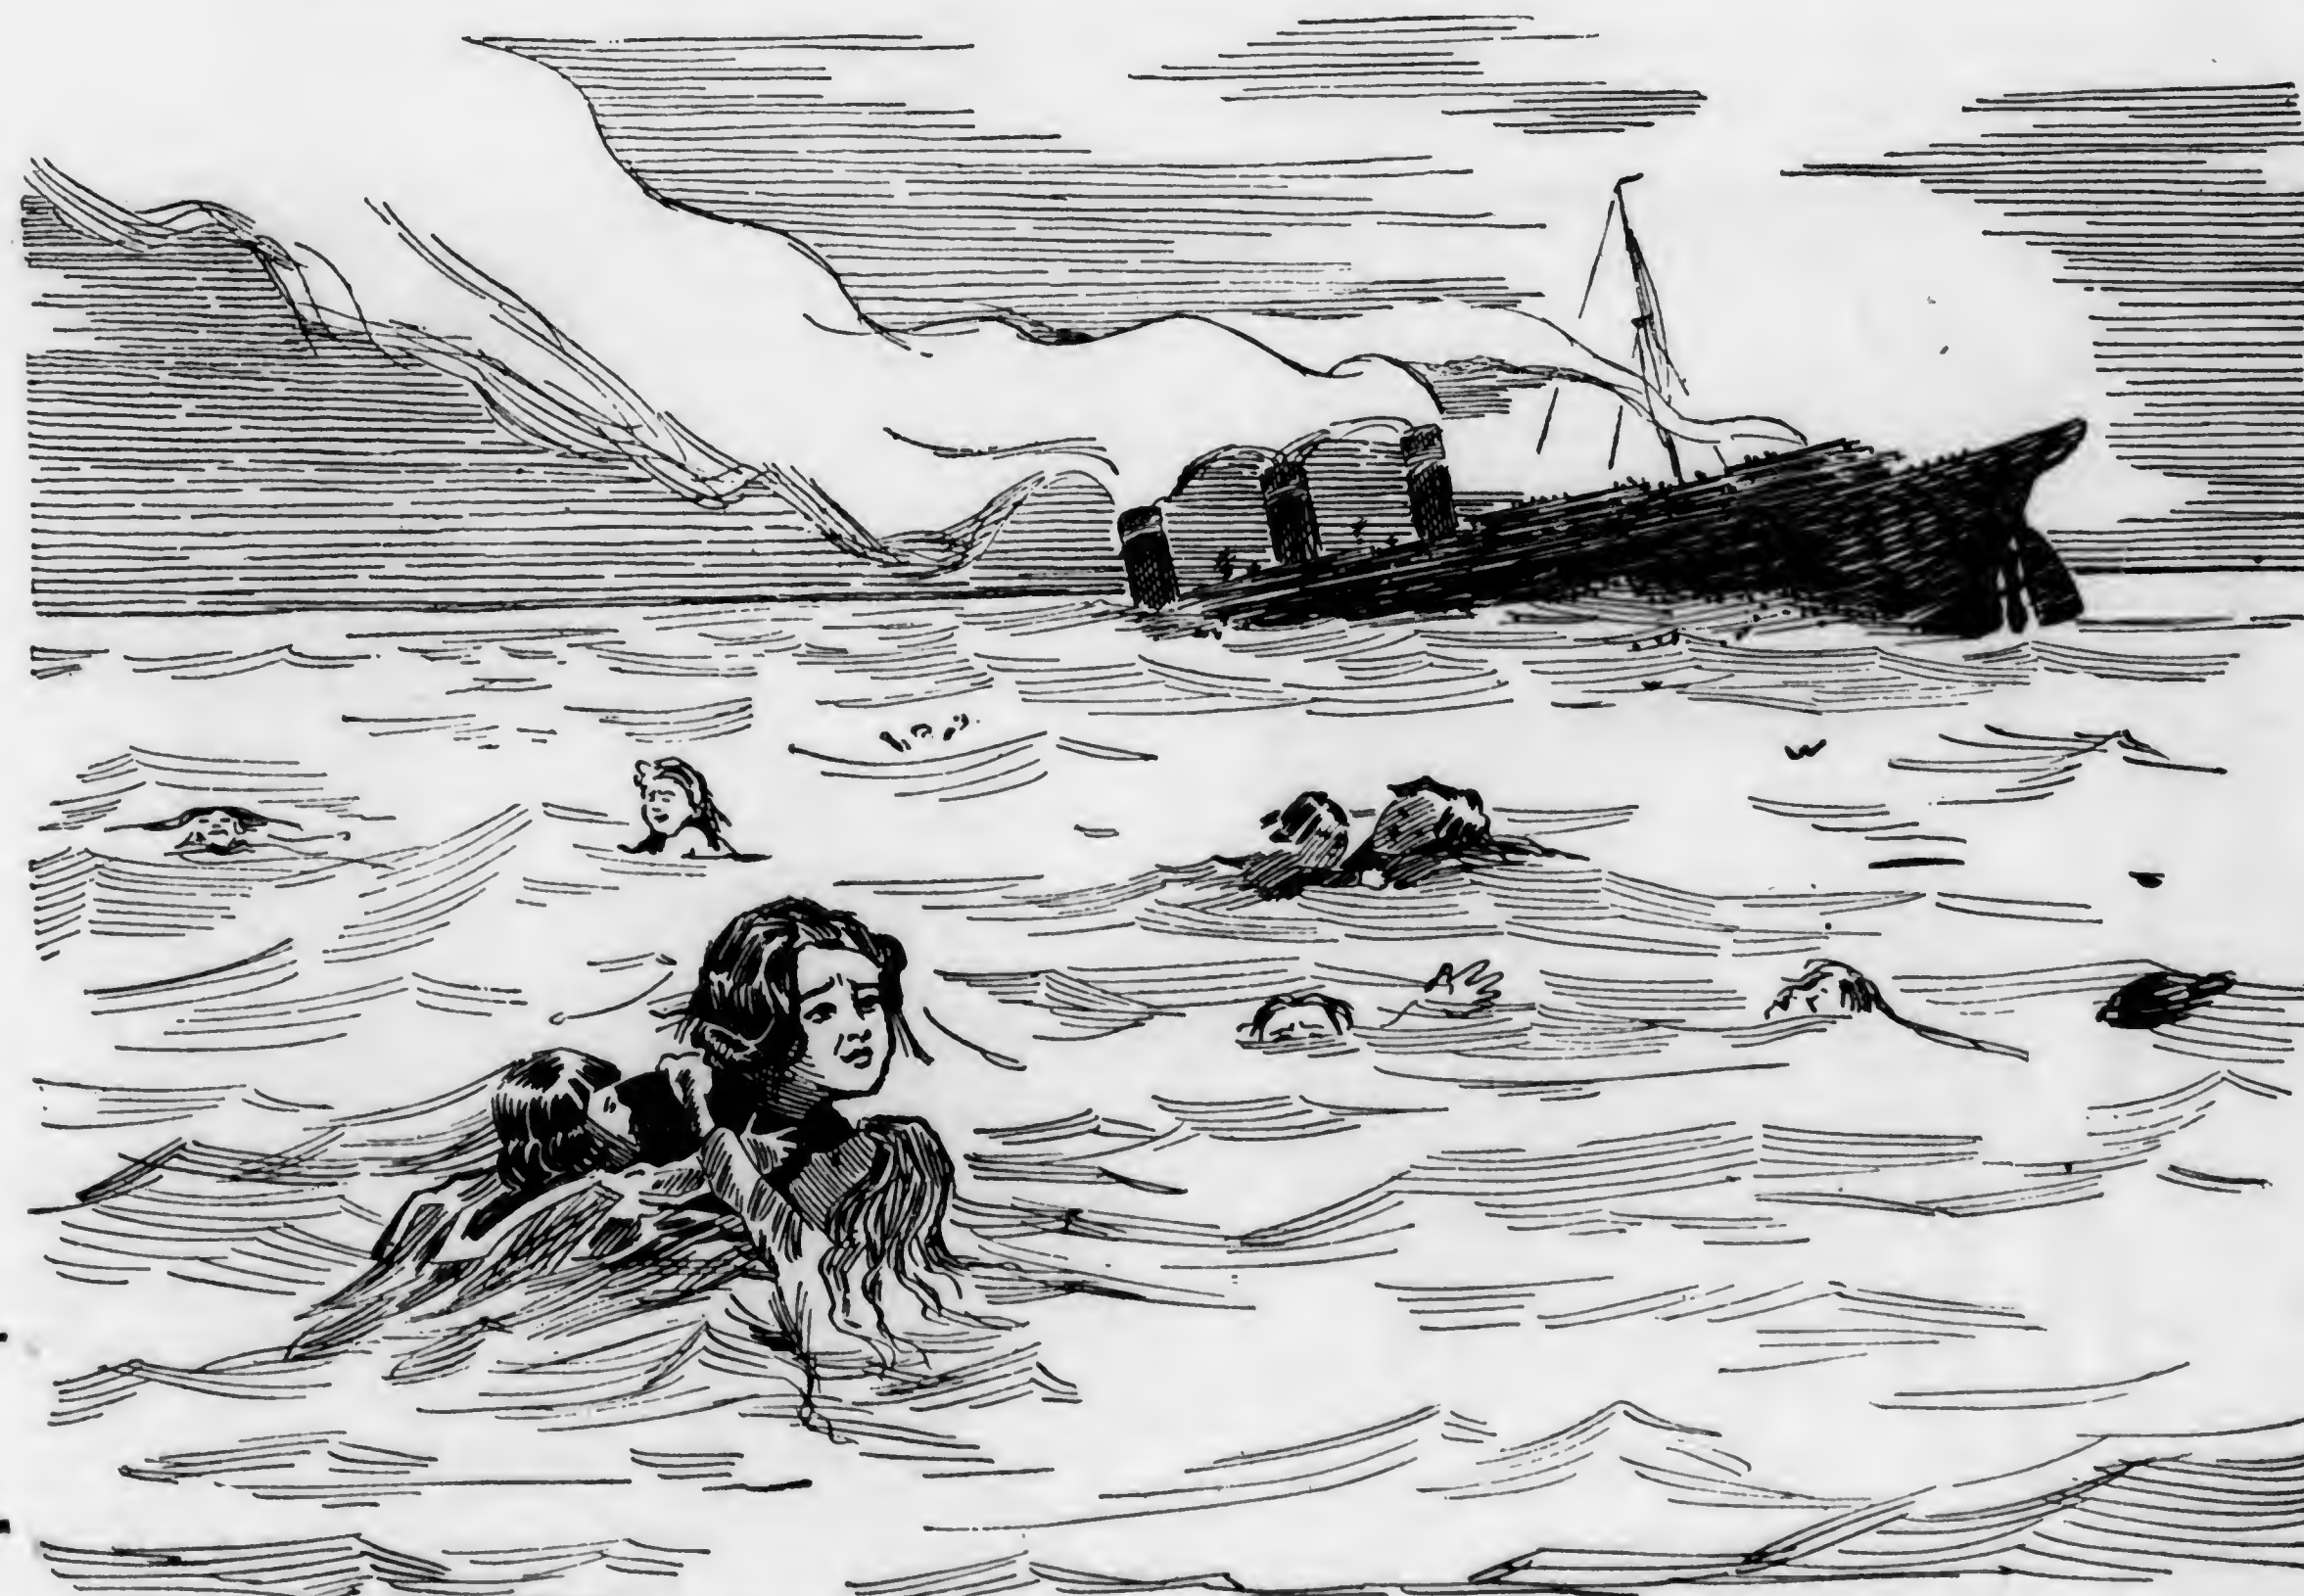

This man produces milk with less than 10,000 bacteria per cc and has very simple equipment. Anyone can do it.

A Home Pasteurizer. Easy to use and safe.

A practical type of sanitary milk pail all milkers should use.

THE HORRORS OF HUMAN SACRIFICE.

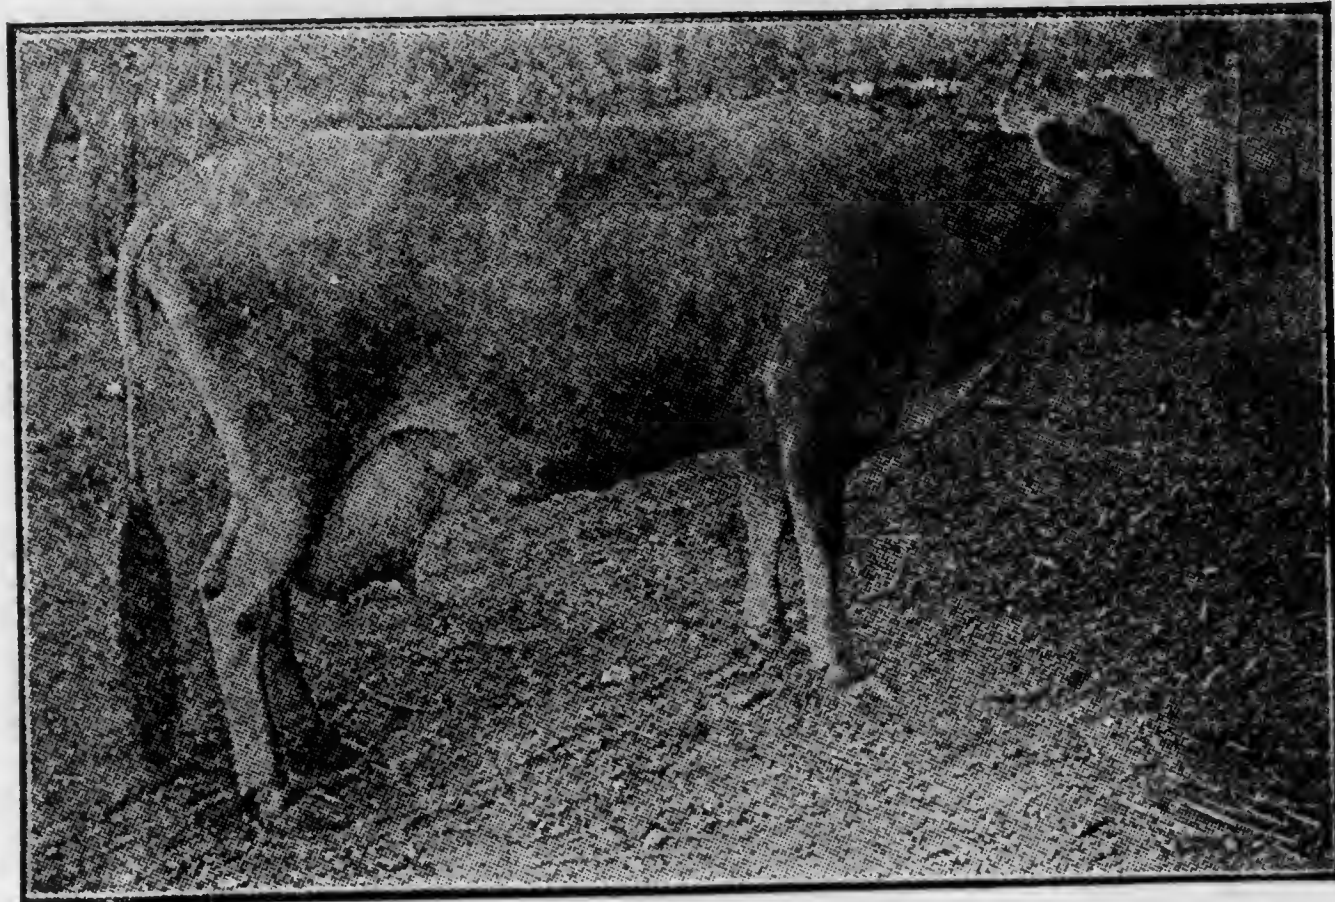

Here is a graphic picture of the Lusitania sacrifice of human lives, occasioned by a murderous way of destruction and suffering unparalleled in all human history. The Nation stands appalled at the deliberate death blow dealt to 1,214 human innocents. Yet it is because of the unusual occasion, the ruthless manner and the grave international circumstances of those deaths that our hearts are roused to indignation. Do we not witness with indifference in our midst, the daily preventable sacrifice of innocent, helpless children the year round, year after year, by diseases caused by poisonous foods, milk in particular, and by infections bred in the filth of the neglected homes and business centers—sometimes carried by flies we could exterminate? Shame upon us!

The heartrending disaster of the Lusitania is as nothing to the daily sacrifice of infants by bad milk and neglecting hygiene education.

READ AND REFLECT.

The accompanying picture shows a cow apparently not sick. For this very reason the cow may be very dangerous, for she has tuberculosis and no body suspects it; she may throw out tuberculosis germs in her milk, or the bowel discharges, for, the cow coughs but does not spit her disease germs, she swallows them.

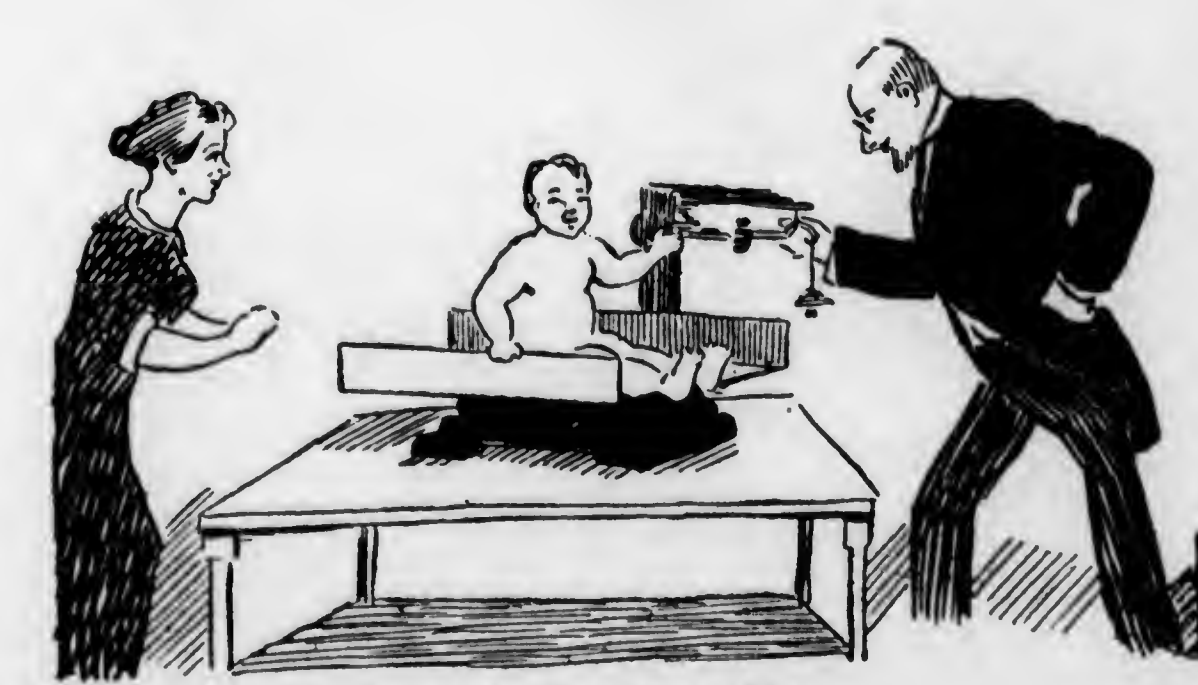

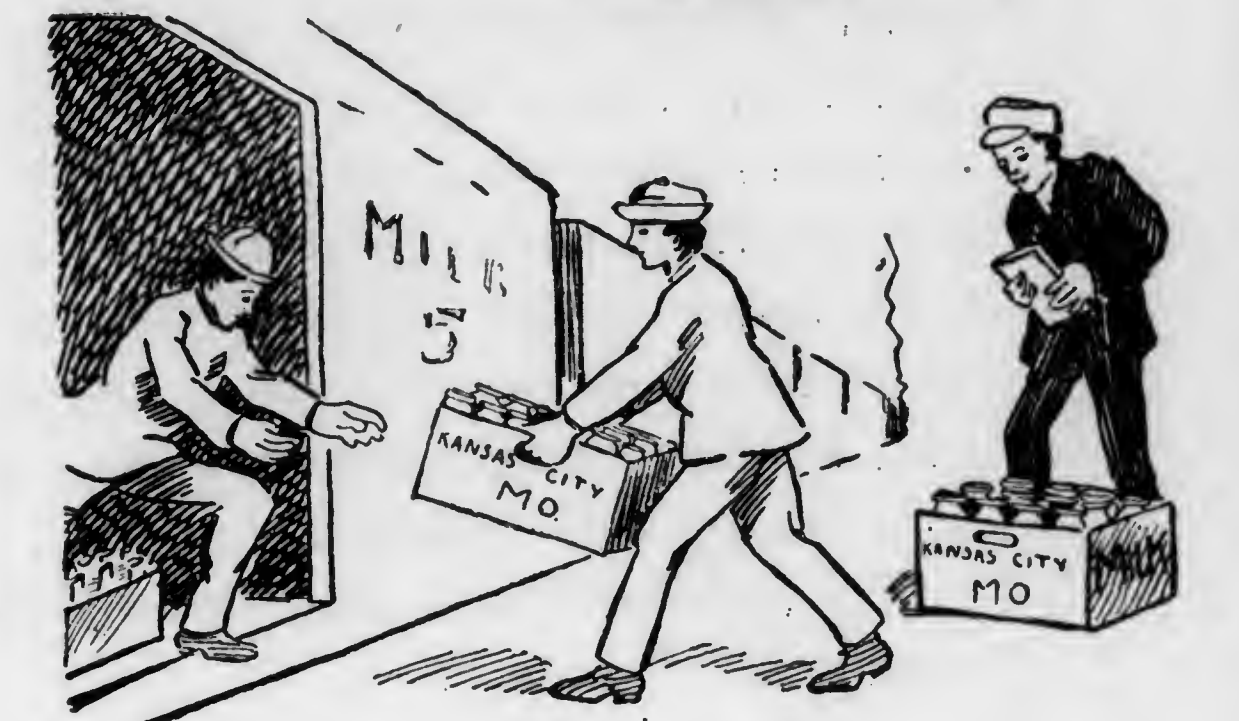

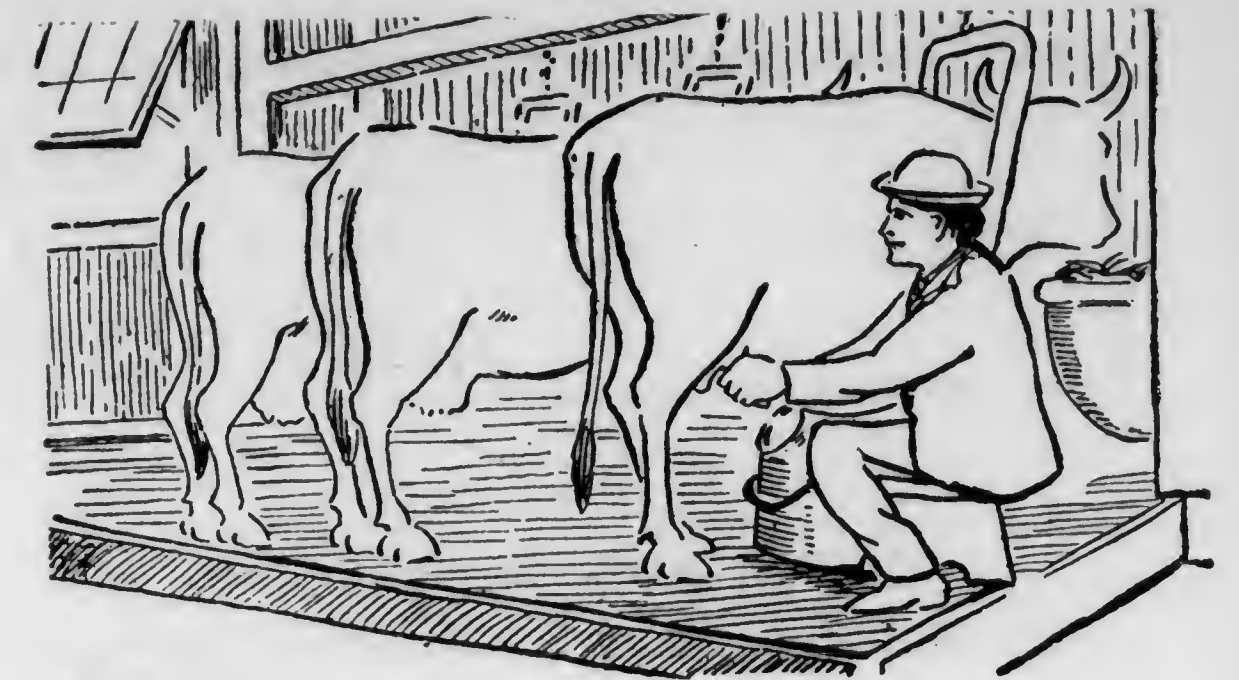

This Cow Has Tuberculosis. The more dangerous because she looks well. No one suspects her condition.

nure dirt may reach the milk in the milk pail. This is a possible source of tuberculosis infection.

The daily slaughter of innocents throughout the land by bad milk is abominable; yet there are dairy interests that defy law and decency and force death dealing milk upon the people.

The Wrong and the Right Way of Handling Milk and the Results.

If raw milk is suspicious, pasteurize it at home, if you can't get the pure, raw, or freshly and truly pasteurized in the market. Set filled, washed and scalded bottles, capped, or plugged with sterile cotton, in dish of cold water, and heat to 145 or 150 degrees, Fahrenheit, and leave them at that thirty minutes. Then cool gradually by placing them in warm water and pouring cold water in slowly. Get milk down to 50 degrees or lower as quickly as possible and put away in a cool or cold place, preferably on ice. Keep a thermometer in a bottle during whole process. Plunging a hot bottle suddenly in cold water will break it.

Real pasteurization entirely destroys germs and impurities.

be the ideal milk, but it is to-day an impossibility; even clarifying, though most excellent, cannot take out all the germs. Hence:

Correctly pasteurized clarified milk is the nearest to the ideal available for safety against germs left by clarification, but it is not as good in a general sense as fresh, true certified milk or raw milk with less than 50,000 ordinary bacteria per cubic centimeter and no disease germs.

Certified milk (if properly produced), is almost ideal in the matter of "cleanliness and decency, leading all other milks in these respects." If clarified it is still better. , "However certified milk cannot furnish a guarantee of safety" against live germs.

vs.
THE SHORT HAUL

70 per cent of city babies get their food through a tube 60 miles long.

It takes about 36 hours—often 42 hours—for the milk to run from the cow end of the tube to the baby end of the tube.

This tube is open in many places and baby's food is frequently polluted. It is often wrongly kept in overheated places.

Then there may be a diseased cow at the country end of the tube.

And Yet Some People Wonder Why So Many Babies Die!

THE CASE OF SACCHARIN VS. SUGAR.

By ANNE LEWIS PIERCE, Director of the Tribune Institute.
Reprinted by Permission of the New York Tribune.

Sugar Is a Food; Saccharin a Drug Condiment.

Battle to Legalize This Cheap Coal Tar Sweetener.

We are a great people for thinking that if a sin is little enough it becomes a virtue. Our principles all seem to have a vanishing point. Why make a fuss about a trifle? And then we wake up to find that we have abandoned a principle for an expediency, and that we have no defense and no redress when the little concession takes on a bean-stalk growth.

We now use a little bit of alum in our pickles and baking powders, a trifle of benzoate of soda in our catsups and jams, just a speck of sulphur dioxide in our molasses and dried fruits, and why not saccharin instead of sugar?

It is so much cheaper and 500 times sweeter, and you can't prove it injures health unless you get more than .3 gram (4.5) grains a day (so says the referee board).

More than this amount, however, they feel sure causes "digestional disturbances"!

But why not take a sporting chance that you won't collect in your system more than the safe amount of these injurious substances? Surely no good American will mind taking a slight risk like this in behalf of commercial gains when, as one vice president of the United States argued, his firm saved $4,000 in one year just by substituting saccharin for sugar!

Here we have the matter in a nutshell

Who is Saccharin? What is she,
That all the swains adore her?

Saccharin is an artificial product made from coal tar—even its sweetness is not like that of sugar. It is sickening in its intensity, and it has not another attribute in common with the Great Sweetener—sugar.

Sugar furnishes energy and heat at the rate of 1,815 calories a pound. Four ounces a day, which is an average amount, would yield 454 calories. In times of great exertion it is the readiest available source of energy and endurance and will prevent fatigue—hence its presence in the ration of the athlete, the mountain climber and the soldier.

Saccharin, on the other hand, furnishes the body nothing at all except the extra labor on the part of the kidneys to excrete it! "A fair exchange is no robbery"—but is this a fair exchange?

Isn't it robbing the body to substitute saccharin for sugar?

Too much sugar may cause fermentation in the stomach or intestines—but it will never cause diabetes or kidney trouble—as the promoters of saccharin would lead you to think.

It is well known that the converse of a proposition is not always true. Because diabetics cannot eat sugar it is blandly and with childlike naivete announced that sugar causes this trouble.

Never were effect and cause more blithely juggled. Nothing could be further from the truth.

Not content with this distortion of facts, we are assured by the same light and airy process of inverted reasoning that since saccharin is good even for a special kind of invalid it must be more wholesome for a well person.

Saccharin is a drug condiment; it is not a food.

Nearly all drugs which are useful under abnormal conditions are injurious when not needed. This is a fundamental principle in therapeutics which is well established.

The advertising of such misstatements as these to promote the substitution of saccharin for sugar should be a red flag of warning to all reasonable folks of the sinister and selfish aim at work in this propaganda.

The diabetic takes saccharin as the lesser of two evils. If he must have a sweetener to keep up his appetite, and owing to the diseased condition cannot digest sugar, a minute amount of saccharin may be used. Even the diabetic would probably be better off without it.

So when the manufacturers of saccharin urge you to avoid the "dangers of sugar"—a staple food since the days of the ancients, who called it "the honey of reeds"—by substituting a non-food coal tar product discovered but recently, remember that the economy is theirs, the risk is yours, and keep on smiling sweetly and eating sugar!

A Long-Drawn Battle.

The legal ins and outs of the battle between sugar and saccharin would be amusing if there were not so much at stake.

The Federal Government, after issuing four different decisions, flatfootedly rules that while foods for the cure or mitigation of disease may contain saccharin, if so labeled, "this must not be interpreted to mean that the use of saccharin in foods prepared for ordinary consumption is permissible even if declared on the label."

Plain enough, that!

Whereupon the saccharin advertisers say: "Use saccharin to sweeten, and do not hesitate to declare its presence on the label. Such decoration stamps your goods as being healthful."

Could effrontery go further? By all means, "do not hesitate" to declare it on the label if the goods go into interstate commerce—otherwise you may be fined or sent to jail!

That is how the warning should read under the Federal decision!

These remarkable statements are based on a Missouri decision, which in reality decided that the law could not prohibit the presence of an ingredient unless it were proven to be injurious in the amounts in which it was present; and, secondly, that the particular law at issue was unconstitutional, because it was class legislation, and prohibited the use of saccharin in one class of products only, i. e., soft drinks, and was therefore discriminatory.

On which slender foundation the saccharin manufacturers have erected a brave edifice proving the superiority of saccharin to sugar as a sweetener, and its healthfulness and economy!

Better fortune attended the recent test case tried in New York city against the Excelsior bottling works. By a vote of 2 to 1 the special sessions justices sustained the ordinance of the board of health and decided that the prohibition of saccharin in food products was constitutional. "The lowering of quality by substituting a material of no food value for one of high food value" is the foundation for this decision in the interests of preventing imposition and fraud.

It is to be noted that while the point of injuriousness is not present, neither is it denied. Judge Russell says: "Although as an ingredient of food it may not be deleterious, still its use can be absolutely prohibited." And note that, although it "may not be" deleterious, the possibility remains and the law prohibits the use of a food as injurious if "it contains any ingredient that may render such article of food injurious to health."

The law does not require that the poisonous ingredient shall in all cases and under all conditions be injurious—the possibility of harm is enough to exclude it.

It was cleverly urged that saccharin is used only for its condimental value, and therefore the question of food value is not pertinent. But it must be remembered that the natural condiments, such as salt and pepper, have also distinct functions in the body, the salt being necessary to digestion, and the pepper being a stomachic—whereas the saccharin plays no part whatever in the body economy.

And furthermore, it is substituted for a product not exclusively condimental, sugar having both flavor and food value. If we substituted salt or pepper in a product for one of the food elements it would also be objectionable, although to a less degree than in the case of saccharin.

Those Who Need Protection.

One especially cheering feature of Judge Russell's opinion is this statement: "Nor will a suitable label afford a sufficient protection to the public against fraud. The blind and illiterate are entitled to the full protection of the law."

This is a master stroke!

The "poor" might also be included; they are usually the same as the illiterate, and they get the cheap adulterated products of this kind every time, and are the least able to protect themselves from the imposition or to support the loss in food value.

Our food law is becoming only a misbranding and labeling act. Anything goes—if only it is mentioned on the label!

The New York case, while most encouraging after the Missouri decision, will probably be appealed. The end is not yet, and eternal vigilance only can bring complete defeat when such marked economic advantage (to the manufacturer) is pitted against the unorganized "general welfare."

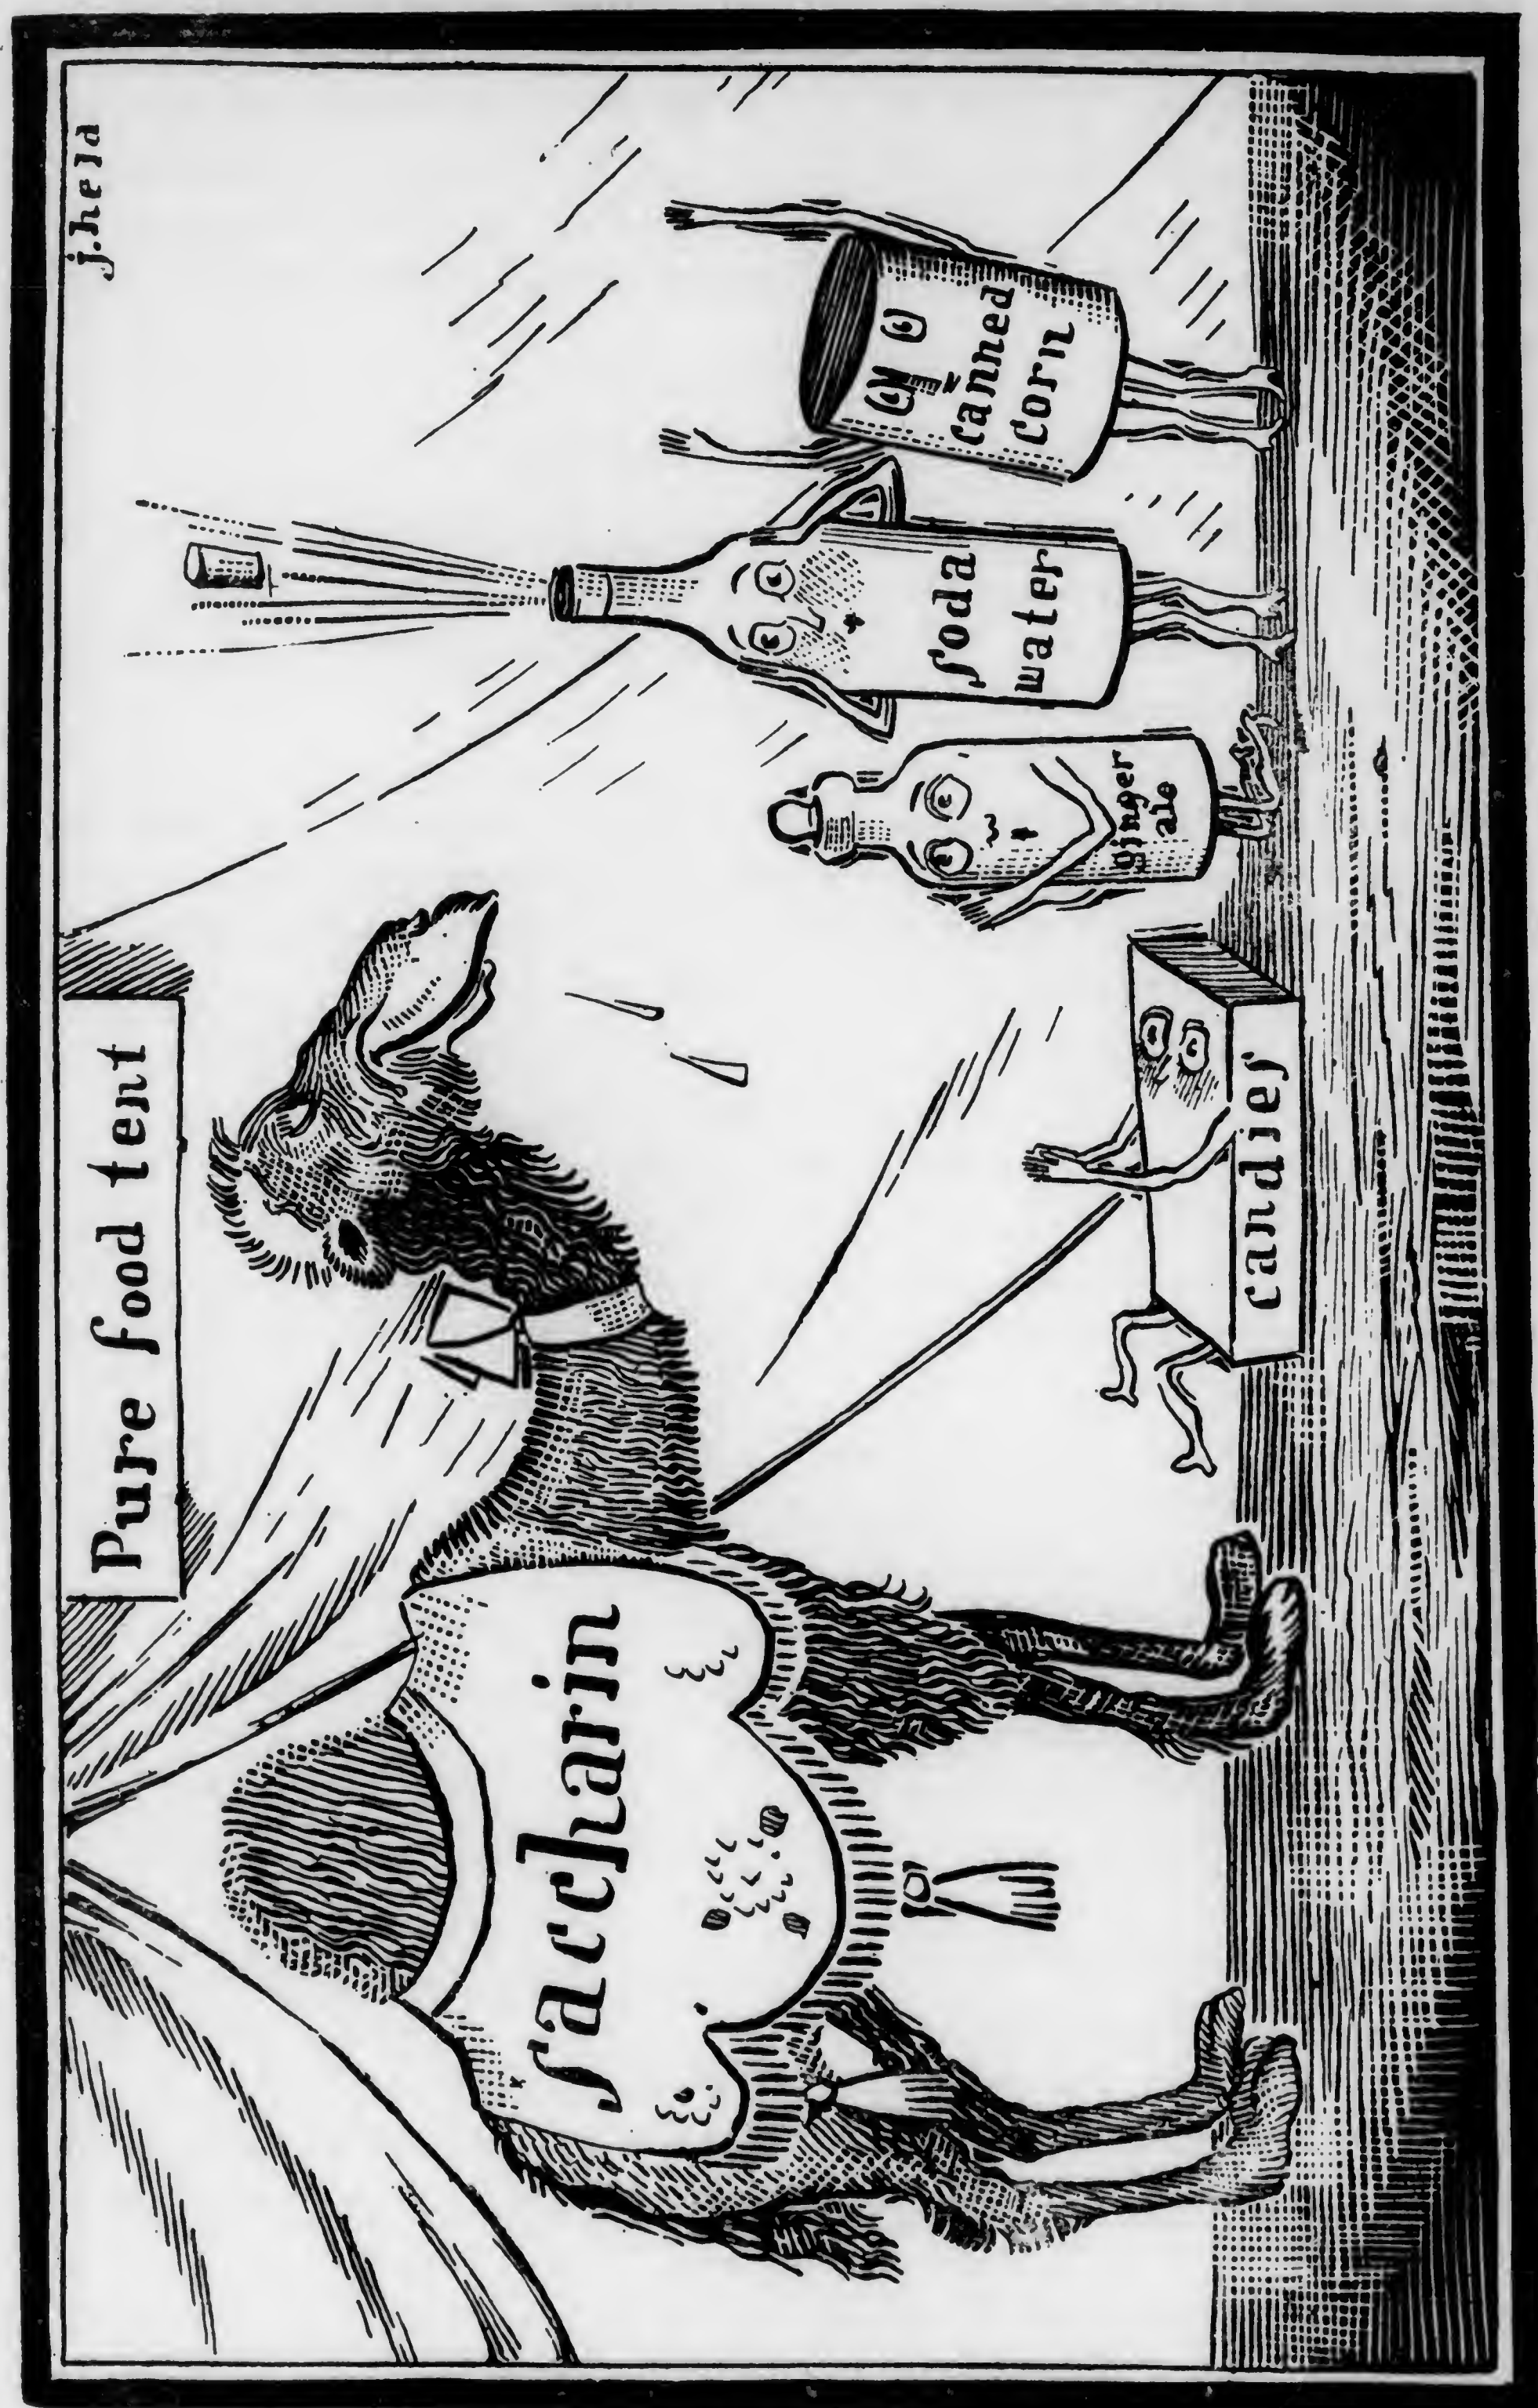

When the Camel Saccharin gets its nose in the Pure Food Tent it won't be long before Good Old Sugar will be sitting in the road outside.

Just now the Germans aren't furnishing the world with sweets—and you can't get saccharin at profitable prices; but when the Teutons go back to their normal pursuits—if in the meantime legal toleration is obtained for saccharin under cover of a small type declaration on a label (that most consumers never see)—then watch developments!

Not only the sodas and ginger ales and canned corn and preserves and candies (the two last named could then be made up for the absent sweetness), but any and all foods calling for sugar, could legally contain instead this coal tar product, admittedly guiltless of any food value and admittedly dangerous to health if you get over a certain amount.

Beware the Cheap Substitute.

Only "one hundredth of 1 per cent" in your ginger ale. It takes a small man to quibble over that, doesn't it?

"When the Camel Saccharin Gets His Nose Into the Pure Food Tent, It Won't Be Long Before Good Old Sugar Will be Sitting in the Road Outside."

But—suppose you make up the "injurious" amount from other sources? And, supposing you are not injured at all, are you interested in saving thousands a year to the food manufacturers by cutting down the quality and food value of these several foods? About 30 have been known to contain saccharin. Debasing quality by the substitution of non-food material for true foods is one of the most insidious forms of food adulteration.

We don't hear anything of reducing the price of foods in which this cheaper artificial sweetener is placed. Nor shall we hear of it!

Truth to tell, we don't believe that even the average food manufacturer, or the canners and others who have ideals for their trades and pride in their output, would use this substitute any more than they use benzoate of soda because they can, but they might be forced by unfair competition to do so if a short-sighted policy legalized this specious fraud, just as millers are forced by unfair competition into bleaching flour.

Don't help to make this possible by failing to read labels and to turn down products substituting saccharin for sugar!

It's the housekeeper's responsibility to back up pure food principles by her intelligent practices in buying.

The saccharin makers are on the job every minute.

Are you on yours?

The Pennsylvania laws specifically prohibit the sale of both food and drink containing saccharin. This is as it should be.

EGG CONDITION IN PHILADELPHIA.

Determined to break up the nefarious practice of dealing in rotten eggs, known as "rots" and "spots," Dairy and Food Commissioner James Foust, of the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture has had secret investigators at work in Philadelphia for the past two weeks and they have uncovered the methods of an old band of rotten egg dealers who have reorganized and are working in different ways to avoid the laws. Commissioner Foust is determined to break up the rotten egg sale in Philadelphia and with the co-operation of Director of Public Safety William H. Wilson and Attorney General Francis Shunk Brown, a general clean-up is expected within a short time.

The egg act of 1909 makes it unlawful for any person, firm, or corporate body, by himself, herself, itself or themselves, or by his, her, its, or their agents, servants or employes, to sell, offer for sale, expose for sale, or have in possession with intent to sell, eggs that are unfit for food. Violations of the act call for a fine of from $200 to $1,000 or imprisonment of from three to nine months.

Commissioner Foust says:

"The unscrupulous crowd of wholesalers, rotten egg dealers, bakers and proprietors of food places which use decayed and decomposed eggs must get out of Philadelphia and the State. The nefarious practice is endangering the health of the people of Philadelphia and with the present epidemic of infantile paralysis every care and caution must be taken to see that food is not contaminated by the use of rotten eggs, strictly prohibited by law.

"In days gone by rotten eggs were hauled in undertaker wagons to try to avoid suspicion and throw pure food agents off their guard, but now the unscrupulous crowd is inhabiting dumps and buildings made almost air tight to prevent the terrible stench. They watch through knot holes and by their actions acknowledge their intent to break the laws. This most outrageous band of conspirators must and will be broken up and we will insist upon the maximum penalties of $1,000 fine or nine months in jail. The wholesalers are prohibited by law from selling 'rots' and 'spots' and prosecutions will extend from their establishments to the collectors, distributors and the owners of bakeries, restaurants and others using them for food purposes."

Partial report of agents of Dairy and Food Bureau of Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture who made special survey of conditions governing the traffic in the class of eggs known to the trade as "rots" and "spots" and which at this season of the year accumulate in quite large quantities among wholesalers handling eggs on a large scale:

An Organized Business

The problem of buying and disposing of the rejected eggs accumulating among wholesale eggs dealers is being handled by an organized bunch of men. These are principally men living in the lower part of the city and they now have the trade of a majority of the big wholesalers, although they may not have all of them. There may be a working connection among the wholesalers and these men.

The secrecy practiced by several parties that we shadowed, and their roundabout methods, indicate that they are handling rotten eggs deliberately and are intentionally selling and using them for food purposes.

The work of the organizations is to gather up, and then prepare, sell and deliver rejected eggs. We found that these eggs were collected by one set of men, prepared by hired workers, and then distributed by another set of men. Apparently they have no connection with the business of each other, and they use every precaution to avoid suspicion.

In disposing of their eggs they deliver some to a tannery, some are shipped outside the State while the balance are delivered to bakers, restaurants and light lunch stands.

The wholesaler is realizing a better price, and with less work and worry than heretofore under individual effort, so he is satisfied. And in candling their eggs now a number of the wholesalers keep the "rots" separate from the "spots." This lessens work and oversight in the subsequent handling and breaking of the eggs.

We have lined up what we consider one principal collecting concern. Their method was observed August 1st when we saw them with a tightly covered one horse wagon and black horse driving to the store of a wholesaler with part of a load already on the wagon. Eggs in the shell were carried out from this establishment in wooden butter tubs until the load was completed. We trailed the wagon to the firm's place of business, an isolated building in a section of the city where no one can hope to get to it unobserved. They have a commanding view in all directions and can work unobserved day and night. The place is situated in one of the most filthy sections with stagnant water pools, mosquitoes, flies, etc., and the stench is horrible this weather. We made a complete survey and saw the unloading of the crates and the placing of fifteen empty butter tubs in the wagon and the return trip back to the wholesale district for another load.

They haul a lot of eggs to this place in the daytime, but few are seen to come out in daylight. One night we shadowed the place and there was nothing done at that time but on another occasion at 10.30 at night we saw several of their wagons going in and out from the isolated section.

My personal surmise is that they have certain points to which they deliver eggs, that they are brought up to these places surreptitiously and left, and the next morning other parties gather them up and deliver them to bakeries and other food consuming places.

A Distributing Agency

Another party is connected with these fellows as a distributor of eggs to bakers and others. The volume of business done at this place is too small to anywhere near pay expenses. To justify selling eggs the party must have a place of business, phone, etc., but he takes few eggs out from this place. There are employed several women part of the day in breaking eggs, etc., and we found an old offender, an egg tester, connected with the establishment.

Although the weather has been hot they always keep the heavy tight doors securely closed and fastened on the inside while at work within. No one is given an opportunity to see within until everything is ready. The employes are not admitted unless they are at work at a special time and we witnessed one of the women late one morning but although she rapped at intervals, pounded and kicked at the big doors they were not opened.

One night about 8 o'clock twelve partly full crates were loaded into a wagon and taken down to a dump where they were thrown out. We examined and found the crates contained egg shell with terrible stench. The sneaking ways of these people show guilt. There are many other parties under suspicion and we have a record of their work and methods.

To break up the practice of controlling geniuses should be landed and to round them up is some job but with plenty of men and the assistance of Director of Public Safety Wilson we can do it. The business is even more loathsome and disgusting than that of dives.

A SIMPLE STEAM STERILIZER.

We are glad to call the attention of the Bulletin's readers to a publication just issued by the Dairy Division of the United States Department of Agriculture. This is Bulletin No. 748, entitled "A Simple Sterilizer for Farm Dairy Utensils," and it promises to prove a very valuable invention. Accompanying the Bulletin is a circular from the pen of B. H. Rawl, chief of the Dairy Division, who says:

"It has been found that the sterilization of utensils and the cooling of milk are the two greatest factors in keeping down bacterial counts in milk. The sterilization of dairy utensils assists greatly in keeping down the initial bacterial contamination on the farm.

"We think that steam sterilization of all dairy utensils is necessary. The great trouble has been the cost of sterilizer and boiler, so great, in fact, that it has not been regarded as reasonable to require the dairyman to practice sterilization.

"We believe that we have solved this difficulty by means of the simple sterilizer described in this bulletin. The sterilizer has been found as efficient as any other form of sterilizer in which steam is not under pressure."

We advise our readers who are interested in the dairy business to send to the United States Department of Agriculture at Washington for copies of Bulletin No. 748. The sterilizer described in its pages can be constructed, we are told, at a cost of from $5 to $10. The sterilizer is carefully described in the bulletin and the material of which it is composed, its dimensions and the method of its construction are all carefully described. Perhaps it is not necessary that we should speak of the advantage of sterilization. The important point is this: Here is a sterilizer which costs merely a nominal sum, which can be constructed by the farmer or dairyman himself and which will more than pay for itself in the first year.

Here is an extract from the bulletin the truth of which will be recognized by all who have to do with the care of milk: "Dirty dairy utensils, and even those which apparently are clean, but which have not been sterilized contain vast numbers of bacteria which are added to milk or cream when it comes into contact with them. These bacteria when introduced into milk begin to grow and produce changes which spoil it. It is true that even when milk is produced under clean conditions it will contain a few bacteria, and when such milk is placed in unsterilized utensils or is run through an unsterilized strainer cloth of separator, large numbers of bacteria are added, which are liable to spoil it quickly. When dirty utensils are sterilized by steam all bacteria and disease germs which may be upon them are destroyed." Under such conditions milk remains sweet much longer.

ADULTERATING THE FOOD OF THE PEOPLE.

The adulteration of food is still carried on by unscrupulous persons who either desire to accumulate large profits or to produce something they can sell at a much lower price than their more conscientious competitors. It is a pity this is so, but it's likely to persist, in spite of detection, arrest and fine, so long as human nature—some human nature—is what it is.

There is an adulterating process which simply cheats the customer. It adulterates food in a perfectly harmless way by adding water, grain or some cheap substance which reduces the cost of manufacture and thus cheats the purchaser without doing any positive harm to his stomach or the other delicate members of his body. The manufacturer humbugs his customers but he does not make them sick or kill them. He simply deprives the food of its true value.

There are manufacturers who are far less scrupulous. They are so anxious to get rich that they resort to any trick that is likely to help along their scheme. Look at the record of arrests for July, for instance. Note the various offenses charged to the account of the persons arrested. Some used an excessive amount of a drug that is believed to be harmful to the ordinary stomach. Some employ drugs that are known to be deadly in excessive quantities and dangerous under any or all circumstances. Others concocted poisonous brews and sold them in midsummer to thirsty and innocent children, regardless of the results.

Of course the food manufacturer who uses deadly drugs of one sort or another, imperiling the lives of his customers is the greater criminal of the two. We cannot conceive of any more infamous crime against the social order than the manufacture of adulterated food products, especially when the adulterant used is a poison. We would be pleased if the penalties were far more severe than they are and if every offender were picked up and given the full extent of the law. A special effort is made by this bureau during the heated term to gather in and bring before the bar of justice all offenders. Sooner or later, they are all confronted by a stern judgment day.

Housekeepers can greatly aid the Dairy and Food Bureau in the future, as they have repeatedly done in the past, by keeping their eyes wide open for undoubted violations of law and notify somebody connected with the Bureau. We are aware that the season in which most of these offenses are committed is about ended. Still, this warning may be recalled and acted upon in the future.

PROSECUTIONS ORDERED DURING JULY.

A few more daring violators of the food laws of the Commonwealth were detected during the month of July than were prosecuted the preceding month. There were fifty-seven more prosecutions in July than in June. The record in detail is as follows:

Almost two-thirds of the prosecutions ordered instituted in the month of July were for violations of the Non-Alcoholic Drinks Act. Violations were detected in Allegheny, Beaver, Bucks, Cameron, Chester, Clarion, Columbia, Crawford, Delaware, Elk, Erie, Fayette, Lawrence, Luzerne, McKean, Mercer, Montgomery, Philadelphia, Potter, Schuylkill, Tioga, Venango, Warren, Washington and Westmoreland. The offenses charged were as follows: Selling "Ironbeer," misbranded, contained no iron, 1; orange beverage, colored with a coal tar dye, and contained no orange, 1; orange cider, colored with a coal tar dye to make it appear better than it is, 2; raspberry pop, artificially colored with a vegetable color, 1; orangeade, colored with a coal tar dye, 1; raspberry soda, sweetened with saccharin, 1; cherry phosphate and raspberry soda, sweetened with saccharin, 1; root beer, sweetened with saccharin, 3; orangeade, sweetened with saccharin, misbranded, artificially colored and flavored with a coal tar dye and contained no fruit juice, 2. In addition to the foregoing there were two arrests for selling grape soda; one for selling chocolate soda; one each for selling orange and lemon soda; four for selling raspberry soda; five for selling cherry soda; seven for selling strawberry soda; one for selling grape smash; four for selling cherry smash; one for selling cherry cheer; two for selling peach pop; two for selling grape pop; three for selling cherry pop; thirteen for selling raspberry pop; sixty for selling strawberry pop, all of which were misbranded, artificially colored and flavored with a coal tar dye and contained no fruit juice. In all 121 prosecutions.

Under the Cream and Milk act twenty-four prosecutions were ordered. These were instituted in Berks, McKean, Philadelphia and Westmoreland counties. They were for the following offenses: Selling cream low in butter-fat, 10; skimmed milk, watered, 2; milk low in solids, watered, 2; milk low in fats and solids, skimmed, 3; milk low in fats and solids, 7.

Prosecutions, 17 in all, were ordered in Allegheny, Beaver, Crawford, McKean, Philadelphia, Schuylkill, Tioga, Warren and Washington counties under the Pure Food act. The offenses charged were as follows: Selling extract of lemon, containing wood or methyl alcohol, 1; codfish containing an excessive amount of sodium benzoate, 1; tomato catsup misbranded containing an excessive amount of sodium benzoate and unfit for food purposes, 1; baccalis (dried) fish containing boric acid, 2; selling goat meat for mutton which was also unfit for food purposes, 2; selling goat meat for mutton, 5; selling cherries containing sulphur dioxide, 5.

Prosecutions under the Ice Cream act were ordered in Bucks, Chester and Philadelphia counties. They were 4 in number and were all for the same offense—selling vanilla ice cream low in fat.

Venango and Warren counties witnessed two prosecutions, one for the sale of Vienna style sausage containing vegetable flour, the other sausage meat containing vegetable flour and added water.

Philadelphia witnessed the institution of 2 prosecutions, both for the sale of imitation lard not properly marked.

Under the Egg act two prosecutions were instituted in Philadelphia for the sale of eggs in shell unfit for food purposes.

There was 1 prosecution ordered instituted in Philadelphia under the Fruit Syrup act. It was for selling Grenadine syrup colored with a coal tar dye.

There was but a single prosecution under the Oleomargarine act. It was for selling oleomargarine colored yellow and named butter. The offense occurred in Lackawanna county.

The total number of prosecutions ordered during the month amounted to 174.

CO-OPERATING FOR CLEAN FOOD.

Persistent efforts to compel careful and clean handling of the food, fruit and candy sold the public in Philadelphia are now being made by Director of Public Health and Charities Dr. William Krusen through co-operation with Dairy and Food Commissioner James Foust, of the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture.

The Philadelphia health authorities have been somewhat handicapped in a vigorous campaign to clean up the food supply of that city by lack of proper authority, but through an arrangement reached by Dr. Krusen and Commissioner Foust, nine attaches of the Department of Public Health and Charities have been appointed collaborating special agents of the Dairy and Food Bureau of the Department of Agriculture and infractions of city and State food laws can now be vigorously prosecuted.

Chemist and food expert, Charles H. Lawall, of the Dairy and Food Bureau, declares that the real menace to children's health is in penny candy that they buy from the pushcart vender and the cheap stalls that are found in all parts of the city.

Mr. Lawall says: "The abolishment of all the candy stores and venders who regularly expose their goods to all the dirt that is swept up from the streets by the wind would be a good measure for the children's health. Tests that I have made show conclusively that candy of this sort is a most prolific cause of intestinal disease because of the street dirt on it."

The State pure food law of May 13, 1909, under which the collaborating agents can now work defines foods to be adulterated if they are diseased, contaminated, filthy or decomposed, or if they are kept in a way or manner that would render them diseased, contaminated or unwholesome.

Edward E. Behrene. These agents will serve as collaborating agents without any compensation from the State, but they will have the authority to place violations before Dairy and Food Commissioner Foust who can order prosecutions under the State laws which provide for heavy penalties.

Dr. Krusen is anxious to clean up the unsanitary food places in Philadelphia and the commissions were issued by the State authorities in order that the Director of Public Health may have full authority to bring about prosecutions.

At a conference between Dr. Krusen and Dr. Vogelson of the Public Health Department with Commissioner Foust, a plan of co-operation was agreed upon in connection with certain secret investigations which will be made, and the results of same will be made public when completed.

PHILADELPHIA AND ROTTEN EGGS.

Rotten egg dealers as well as proprietors of bake shops which use the rots and spots are to be driven out of business in Philadelphia through a campaign which will be waged by Dairy and Food Commissioner James Foust in conjunction with Director of Public Safety William H. Wilson.

For years the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture has been persistently prosecuting dealers who sold the rotten eggs and proprietors of bake shops who purchased them and used them in cakes sold to the public. Only a short time ago one of the agents of the Department found a baker mixing the rotten eggs preparatory to baking cakes. Two agents of the Department have been at work in Philadelphia for the past two weeks preparing data as to dealers, and locations of houses where rotten eggs are sold as well as bake shops where they are used.

For years unscrupulous dealers have been endangering the health of the people of Philadelphia by candling eggs and selling the rots and spots to unscrupulous bakers who use them in food products. The rotten eggs are supposed to be sold for tanning purposes only, but many of them find their way to bake shops.

The amendment to the egg act approved April 11, 1913, prohibits these rots and spots for any purpose, use, cause or reason whatsoever unless they shall first have been denatured with a sufficient quantity of kerosene oil to render them unfit for use in the preparation of food or food products.

Determined to get after the violators Commissioner Foust asked the assistance of the Philadelphia police department through Director of Public Safety William H. Wilson. Commissioner Foust's letter to Director Wilson was as follows:

July 28, 1916.

Honorable William H. Wilson, Director of Public Safety, City Hall, Philadelphia, Pa.:

My Dear Sir:— Owing to the fact that we have only two special agents in Philadelphia to do all the work in connection with the enforcement of the various food laws placed under this Bureau, I find it difficult and practically impossible to cope with the situation in your city relative to the enforcement of the Act of March 11, 1909, together with the amendment thereto, approved April 11, 1913, copies of which are enclosed, prohibiting the sale of eggs which are decayed or partly decayed, or decomposed, as well as to prevent their being used in establishments where food products are prepared or manufactured, such as bake shops, and the like, and I therefore appeal to you for your co-operation and assistance to the end that the provisions of the acts are complied with by all dealers in eggs, as well as establishments where food products are prepared or manufactured.

If you can consistently grant my request, may I suggest that you designate some one of your assistants through whom this co-operation can be effected, as it is my intention to give this important matter my personal attention.

There is a class of dealers and bakers in Philadelphia who willfully and maliciously persist in violating this law, and they are well acquainted with its provisions.

Section four of the act provides a penalty of not less than two hundred dollars nor more than one thousand dollars, or to undergo an imprisonment of not less than three months nor more than nine months, or both or either at the discretion of the court.

With the assistance of your very efficient Department and with the severe penalty provided for this outrageous business, I feel sure that we can drive this crowd of dealers in rotten eggs, as well as the bakers who use them, out of business, and by so doing a great public service will be accomplished.

Trusting that you can see your way clear to grant my request and wishing you the greatest success in administering the affairs of your very important office, I beg to remain,

Sincerely yours,

JAMES FOUST,
Commissioner.

Director Wilson showed his hearty accord with the movement and his interest in the health of the Philadelphia public by tendering the assistance of his Department in the following letter:

August 1, 1916.

Mr. James Foust, Dairy & Food Commissioner, Harrisburg, Pennsylvania:

Dear Sir: In reply to your communication of July 28, 1916, I desire to assure you that I will co-operate with your Bureau in bringing about the enforcement of the provisions of the Acts prohibiting the sale of eggs unfit for food, as well as the prevention of their use in establishments as food products.

I am heartily in favor of a complete enforcement of these acts, and will aid you in every way within my power. I am in hearty accord with your sentiments in the matter, and will appreciate it if you will get in touch with me at a time convenient to you, so that we may formulate a plan whereby this Department may detail men to work with your agents.

Very truly yours,

W. H. WILSON,
Director.

At a conference between Commissioner Foust and Secretary of Agriculture, Charles E. Patton, it was decided to appeal to Attorney General Brown so that all the power of the State Government as well as that of Director of Public Safety Wilson could be combined in the move to break up the practice of the notorious rot and spot dealers of Philadelphia.

Commissioner Foust stated that he will arrange to meet with Director Wilson within the next few days when a joint plan for action will be agreed upon.

HAS FEDERAL FOOD LAW FULFILLED EXPECTATIONS.

By DR. HARVEY W. WILEY.

In discussing whether or not the pure food law has fulfilled my expectations, I am put in a rather embarrassing situation.

For six years after its enactment I was charged by the law with the initiative of its execution. The story of those six tempestuous years need not be retold. I may frankly say that at their close I was much dissatisfied with the performance of the act. Five years have elapsed since I left the public service, and I can look back now from some point of advantage over the ten years during which the law has been upon the statute books. This retrospection has served only to accentuate the feeling of disappointment.

What are the facts which force me to entertain a feeling of this kind? The terms of the act, in my opinion, are not greatly at fault. It would be idle to claim that the law is as strong as it should be, but it is not idle to claim that its terms are stronger than the accomplishments which they have achieved. The fault then must be either with the officials in charge of the execution of the law or with the courts.

There are many things in the attitude of the courts which have been very hurtful. Chief among these have been the minimum punishments which have been meted out. Fines of $5 are far more numerous than fines of $200, the maximum allowed for first offense. For second offense, however, much severer penalties are provided, among them imprisonment, but in so far as I know, there has been only one case where a man who violated the pure food law has gone to jail. Offense after offense by the same firm has been passed by with childish fines.

The courts have sustained the fundamental principles of the pure food acts, as a rule. In the cases that have gone to the Supreme Court there are only two which, to my mind, have been unfortunate. The first was the celebrated cancer cure case, in which it was held that that part of the law forbidding false or misleading statements, when applied to drugs, related only to statements of their composition and not to their therapeutic value. Inasmuch as so-called nostrums or patent medicines, are always secret, this decision nullified the law completely, and, fortunately, Congress took prompt steps to correct this harm.

The other case was the bleached flour case, where it was held that the lower court erred on not having charged the jury that any poisonous principle which was added to the flour in the process of bleaching must be shown to be harmful to health, or possibly harmful. This decision evidently rested upon the misconception of the idea found in the language of the act which says that there shall be no harmful or deleterious substance added to foods which may be harmful to health. Having written this statement myself in the text of the act, and having explained its signification to the committee, I think I may say that the Supreme Court missed the intended idea. It was an explanatory phrase to show why these poisonous or deleterious substances were forbidden. It would have been wiser to have not explained, but the idea was that they were forbidden because they might be injurious to health; not that they must be, but that they possibly could be. The other decisions which have been rendered by the Supreme Court have all strengthened the law, especially the last one regarding the meaning of the term "Coca Cola."

The principal cause of my dissatisfaction with the law is the fact that by executive act manufacturers have been permitted unrestrictedly to add materials to food products under cover of executive rulings, which, to say the best of them, are open to grave suspicion. As far back as 1901, I realized that the propaganda for a national pure food law was gathering strength, and must necessarily end in the enactment of a law in the near future. I considered it the part of wisdom to be prepared, to put myself in a condition to execute such a law in a manner conserving the interests of the public. I conceived the idea, therefore, of experimenting upon human beings on a larger scale and over a greater length of time than had ever been attempted before. Securing authority in the appropriation act for this experimental work, I organized it on the best information which I could secure, for the double purpose of illustrating by experiment the effect of certain bodies added to foods upon health and digestion, and at the same time of conserving the life and vitality of those experimented upon.

The organization of this work and its conduct for a period of six years led to the conclusions derived from my studies of the somewhat famous "Poison Squad." During this time I had constantly under observation twelve young men, all in the prime of life, and varying in age from twenty to thirty years. To these young men, over these long periods of time were fed, respectively, borax and boric acid, salicylic acid and salicylates, sulphurous acid and sulphites, benzoic acid and benzoates, formaldehyde, sulphate of copper and nitrate of potash. The results of my investigation were all positive against the use of any of these above-named bodies in human foods. There was no very general protest raised over the question of salicylic acid and formaldehyde. My conclusions in regard to these two substances were never seriously contested, and the courts, in the case of boric acid and borates, uniformly supported my contentions.

With the question of benzoic acid and benzoates, sulphurous acid and sulphites and sulphate of copper, a different line of procedure was followed. The users of these bodies were discouraged from going to the courts. They, therefore, sought a method of escape, and appealed to the President of the United States, Mr. Roosevelt, and he with prompt chivalry came to the rescue. He ordered all the conclusions which I had reached on these questions suspended and referred to a new body, to be named by the Secretary of Agriculture, and that, pending the decisions of this new body, unrestricted use of these injurious substances be permitted.

This may look like "Americanism" to the adulterator, but to a plain American citizen it is worse than any case of hyphenation that has ever come to my observation, and came near being the death blow to the cause. Workers were disheartened, the whole propaganda shattered and unrestricted adulteration was again in the saddle.

You know the long years of waiting since 1907, when this cruel and merciless blow at the pure food cause was struck. The little baby was just an infant. It had hardly passed its first year, and naturally its vitality was destroyed. Since that time the execution of the pure food law has been only a mockery, as it never could be enforced in its entirety. The results of the investigation of the Remsen board overthrew my contentions in regard to benzoic acid and benzoates, half-way sustained them in regard to saccharin, and fully confirmed them in regard to sulphate of copper.

My manuscript explaining the experiments and the conclusions based thereon with the use of sulphate of copper and saltpetre were denied publication by the officials of the Department of Agriculture, and rest somewhere in the files of that department in yellowing, innocuous desuetude. In regard to my decisions on the effects of sulphurous acid and sulphites, the Remsen board was many years before coming to any decision at all. The final decision of this Board has been in the hands of the Department of Agriculture for a long while and no report has ever been issued by the department concerning the findings. I have learned, however, from a reliable source that the Remsen board itself was Rooseveltted. The department was not satisfied with the findings of this board of eminent investigators and has had it reviewed by a new board, the personnel of which I have not been able to discover.

This all illustrates the old adage that:

Big fleas have little fleas on their backs to bite them,
And these fleas have other fleas, and so ad infinitum.

Meanwhile, since 1907, the free and unrestricted use of benzoic acid and benzoates and sulphurous acid and sulphites has been permitted to American manufacturers and none but State authorities have dared to say nay. In the case of benzoate, Indiana had a great fight on its hands, but won against all opposition, including that of the Federal Government, in the District Court before Judge Anderson, and his decision against the use of benzoic acid and benzoates was upheld in a sweeping supporting opinion by the Circuit Court. I believe this matter is still before the Supreme Court.

The pure food and drugs law therefore has fallen far short of what it meant to accomplish and what it would have accomplished had it not been interfered with illegally by the highest executive authority of the country. If "Preparedness" is the slogan of the campaign, then the doctoring of our foods, which impairs our preparedness, is about the most typical anti-American propaganda that can well be imagined.

What the people of this country should do is to rise in the majesty of their offended rights and demand that all of these handicaps to the pure food law be swept aside. We need not go to Congress to do this; we need only to go to the Department of Agriculture and to the White House. Two successive Administrations of four years each have tolerated these wrongs, until now they seem to be fixed principles of justice.

SOUR MILK AND THE PROLONGATION OF LIFE.

The proposition of the prolongation of human life, so conspicuously brought to public attention by Professor Elie Metchnikoff, director of the Pasteur Institute, Paris, in his Optimistic Essays, may be divided into two parts for convenience in presentation—(a) the cause of the premature deterioration of man and (b) its prevention.

Professor Metchnikoff announced in 1904, after several years of research conducted by him and his associates at the Pasteur Institute that the intestines of man are infested with putrefactive bacteria, which produce decomposition, especially of nitrogenous substances such as meat, fish and eggs. This putrefactive process, progressing directly in the organism of man and particularly in the large intestine, creates extremely poisonous compounds which are absorbed into the blood.

The noxious substances generated in the large intestine by the action of putrefactive bacteria on the food are normally eliminated from the blood by the three emunctories—the liver, kidneys and the skin. When the latter become overworked in eliminating intestinal microbic toxins from the blood they fail in the fulfillment of their functions and auto-intoxication or self-poisoning of the system intervenes, resulting in many different ailments, some of them organic.

95 Per Cent. of Human Ailments Result of Auto-Intoxication.

Most human beings are more or less affected by auto-intoxication. Many high medical authorities now state, as the result of scientific inquiries following Professor Metchnikoff's original publication of his investigations that 95 per cent. of all the ailments from which humanity suffers have their origin in this one general cause.

A careful and painstaking examination of scientific and medical literature published during the past ten years will show that eminent authorities have ascribed the following ailments as due, directly or indirectly, to bacterial infection of the intestines and auto-intoxication.

High blood-pressure and arterio-sclerosis, or hardening of the arteries, causing deterioration of the vital organs and producing a condition described as "old age" at a period in life when men and women should be, under normal conditions, "at their best."

General manifestations—Extreme lassitude; billiousness; sleepiness after meals; flushing of the face; dizziness or vertigo; acidity of the stomach; sick headache; heartburn; palpitation of the heart; offensive breath; anemia and loss of weight, and muscular power; indicanura; constipation—occasional or chronic; acute and chronic diarrhea or dysentery; intestinal catarrh; dyspepsia; indigestion, flatulency, gastritis and disturbances of the eyesight.

Organic and constitutional disorders—Bright's disease and other kidney ailments; diabetes; rheumatism; gout; chronic arthritis; cirrhosis of the liver; pernicious anemia; epilepsy, etc.

Nervous disorders—Mental depression with suicidal tendencies; melancholy; mild forms of mental derangement; neurasthenia; neuralgia; sciatica; neuritis, etc.

Skin affections—Degenerative changes and discolorations; odorous perspiration; eczema; urticaria; pimples, or acne, and loss of hair.

Ear, nose and throat diseases—Affection of the hearing; nasal catarrh; bronchial affections; asthma and allied ailments are now regarded, in most instances, as local effects of auto-intoxication.

Infant and children's diseases—Enteritis; summer diarrheas; convulsions and marasmus are caused by bacterial infection of the intestines, which is responsible for the high percentage of infant mortality.

When Professor Metchnikoff published the first announcement of his conviction of the above described physiological condition in man and his opinion that it must inevitably result in the shortening of his days, he stated that he believed that there had been discovered a preventive of auto-intoxication and a corrective of its results—which would have a marked tendency to prolong human life—in a vegetable ferment or bacillus found in the soured milk of Bulgaria. Soured milk forms an important factor in the dietry of the people of that country. The Bulgarians are noted for longevity and show the largest percentage of centenarians of any race in the world. Metchnikoff attributed their health and long life to the constant consumption of a food product containing this bacillus, which, he considered, acted as a biological intestinal antiseptic.

This micro-organism is now known to science as the bacillus Bulgaricus. It is also frequently called the Metchnikoff bacillus. The exhaustive findings as to its therapeutic efficacy and great value in the prevention of auto-intoxication and as a corrective of its sequelae, as originally announced by Metchnikoff and confirmed by Cohendy, Tissler and Combe, and other leading research workers in Europe and America, have since been amply verified and endorsed by eminent medical practitioners throughout the world, who have found it possessed of remarkable remedial properties in the treatment of all the ailments above mentioned as attributed to auto-intoxication.

The bacillus Bulgaricus is a very hardy germ and will create the highest percentage of lactic acid of any known micro-organism. Unlike the common bacteria that cause the natural souring of milk in this country—which produce but a very small amount of lactic acid—it will survive the gastric juices of digestive processes, traverse the stomach and small intestine and reach the large intestine where it will multiply profusely.

The Bacillus Bulgaricus Acts as Biological Intestinal Antiseptic

The bacillus Bulgaricus lives and proliferates in the large intestine on the carbohydrates (sugars) in the diet, converting them into lactic acid. This lactic acid, produced directly in the intestinal contents by the action of the bacillus Bulgaricus on the sugars of the diet acts as an intestinal antiseptic and inhibits the growth of putrefactive bacteria. Putrefactive bacteria cannot live, thrive and produce their toxin in the presence of this nascent lactic acid. They gradually die out and are supplanted by the bacillus Bulgaricus, which of itself produces no toxins and is harmless to man, as Professor Metchnikoff and other research workers have shown and the practical experience of thousands of physicians and laymen has amply demonstrated.

The ordinary sugars of the diet reach the large intestine in very minute quantities, especially the extreme lower part, which, many times, is the actual seat of putrefactive bacterial infection and the production of toxic secretions. The bacillus Bulgaricus loves sugars. The more it encounters it in the large intestine the greater its antiseptic action in inhibiting the growth of putrefactive bacteria and the productions of their toxins.

The presence of sugar in the large intestine is most essential to the full therapeutic effect of the bacillus Bulgaricus in combatting intestinal toxemia. Metchnikoff recognized this and originally recommended the daily eating in generous quantities of dates, prunes, beets or carrots as a part of the diet, these fruits and vegetables providing sugars in forms which reach the deeper parts of the colon or large intestine.

Metchnikoff Discovers a Bacterium Producing Sugar in Large Intestine.

Not satisfied with this dietetic augmentation of sugar supply in the large intestine for the action of the bacillus Bulgaricus, he sought a bacterial means of producing it. In June, 1912, he announced that he had found such a sugar producing bacterium—a bacterium which would convert into sugars in the deeper part of the large intestine the starches from potatoes and cereals which pass largely undigested through the digestive tube. By this means additional pabulum could be furnished for the bacillus Bulgaricus to convert into nascent lactic acid in the lower intestine, thereby greatly increasing its antiseptic influence and therapeutic effect. * * * * *

In reference to naturally soured milks raw milk often contains a variety of molds and fungi that favor the development of pathogenic or harmful microbes in the intestines, and the use of milk that has soured naturally augments the risk of introducing dangerous microbes into the human organism.

The only safe procedure is to thoroughly sterilize milk and then implant into it pure cultures of the bacillus Bulgaricus, together with a bacillus called Paralacticus to control the flavor, whereby a soured milk is produced free from harmful microbes and without the slightest trace of alcohol.

Commercial productions of soured milk claiming to contain the bacillus Bulgaricus in pure culture are now being sold in all parts of the United States. Bacteriological examinations, however, do not verify the claim of most of the producers. They do not contain the genuine strain of the bacillus Bulgaricus selected and studied by Professor Metchnikoff. Many of them show the presence of yeasts and are being recommended for the use of typhoid patients because pure cultures of the bacillus Bulgaricus have been found very beneficial in this ailment. In this connection it should be remembered that Professor Metchnikoff has found that yeasts favor the growth in the intestines of the microbes of infectious diseases such as typhoid fever, etc.

Lactic Acid is Transformed Before Reaching Large Intestine.

It is also an error to believe that any soured milk, of itself, has direct beneficial effect in inhibiting intestinal putrefaction and auto-intoxication. The acidity of milk, whether it be soured naturally by air-borne bacilli or the bacillus Bulgaricus in sterilized milk is caused by the growth in it of a lactic acid creating micro-organism. The lactic acid bacteria which cause milk to sour in this country produce about one-half of one per cent. of lactic acid. On the other hand, the bacillus Bulgaricus produces three per cent. and passes on through the stomach into the large intestine, or the colon, and there multiplies, permeating the excreta and creating its high percentage of antiseptic lactic acid.

Lactic acid in milk, whether soured by the bacillus Bulgaricus or other bacilli, does not reach the large intestine, where the putrefactive processes so destructive to the health and life of man take place—the seat of the cause. Lactic acid whether chemical or created by the multiplication of bacteria in milk, becomes transformed in the upper part of the alimentary tract through the action of physiological chemical processes.

Chemical lactic acid, once extensively used, proved a failure as an intestinal antiseptic, as a preventative and corrective of auto-intoxication, for the reason that it did not reach the large intestine.

It is only the growth of the bacillus Bulgaricus itself directly in the large intestine of man and the lactic acid it there creates without harmful effect, that exercises an efficient inhibitive influence on the proliferation of putrefactive bacteria and acts as a preventive of auto-intoxication and a corrective of disease. Any sour milk that does not contain the bacillus Bulgaricus in pure culture (the milk serving mainly as a vehicle for the administration of the beneficial bacillus) cannot be used with assurance of desired results in the treatment of auto-intoxication. Any beneficial effect of sour milk (except as a vehicle to convey the bacillus Bulgaricus into the intestinal tract) is mainly nutritive, although it has been found helpful in some disorders of the stomach and digestion.

New Vehicles for Administration of the Bacillus Bulgaricus.

Besides this the stomachs of most people cannot tolerate the acidity of soured milk. For this reason, to-day, the bacillus Bulgaricus and the Glycobacter Peptolyticus are being administered in concentrated cultures grown in a more palatable vehicle. The prescribing of soured milk has been largely abandoned by physicians, who have taken up the later and more desirable forms of administering the bacillus Bulgaricus.

This is the crux of Professor Metchnikoff's proposition of prolongation of life:

(a) Good health and long life in highest efficiency—in fact, the prolongation of youth—depend on the large intestine being kept free, to a practical extent, of the putrefactive bacteria, that toxins may not be created therein and absorbed into the blood.

(b) No chemical germicide being known that will reach the large intestine unchanged, or that may be administered in sufficient dosage to prove effective in preventing the growth of putrefactive bacteria in the intestines without doing great harm, the only recourse is the implantation of the intestinal tract with a harmless, living, lactic acid-creating micro-organism which will act as a biological intestinal antiseptic by producing lactic acid directly in the colon in the presence of which putrefactive bacteria cannot live.

(c) The bacillus Bulgaricus being the hardiest and most productive lactic acid creating bacillus known, and its harmlessness to the human organism having been amply demonstrated by experimentation and practical experience covering a period of ten years, the great scientist recommends this micro-organism exclusively in association with the Glycobacter Peptolyticus, as an aid to the prolongation of youth and life.

Antiseptic Action of Bacillus Bulgaricus May be Maintained for Life.

The bacillus Bulgaricus will show evidences of colonization in the large intestine in from two to five days after the first administration. It will cease to grow there in from ten to sixteen days after the last ingestion. When it ceases to multiply and supply its lactic acid, putrefactive germs will, after a time, appear and produce their toxins, for putrefactive bacteria are everywhere present in the air and are being constantly introduced in the organism on the food one eats. But the antiseptic influence of the bacillus Bulgaricus in the large intestine may be kept up for life without harm by the daily continuous ingestion of it in small quantities, thereby replenishing the culture in the intestinal tract.

Every physician now admits that long life, in good health, and high efficiency depends substantially on a bacteriologically clean large intestine. No method is now known which is as effective in ridding the intestines of poisonous bacteria as the periodical administration of the bacillus Bulgaricus.—American Association for Conservation of Life, Inc.

THE THREE "C's" FOR CARING FOR MILK IN THE HOME.

The three "Cs" for the proper care of milk in the home, according to the dairy specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture, are:

Keep milk {
Clean.
Cold.
Covered.

Milk is a highly perishable food and the length of time it will remain sweet and safe, especially for children, the specialists say, depends almost entirely upon the constant care it receives from cow to consumer. Milk passes through three agencies—the producer, the dealer and the consumer. If the first two have done their part, clean, safe milk will be delivered, thoroughly chilled, to the consumer. The consumer's responsibility begins the moment the milk is delivered at his doorstep.

Because milk poured from vessel to vessel on the street is very liable to contamination from the dust, manure particles and germs, milk is best delivered in capped bottles. If bottled milk be obtained, the housewife should try to have some one in the family receive the milk in a clean, scalded utensil, cover it immediately, and put it without delay into the refrigerator, or the coldest available place. Under no circumstances should an uncovered pitcher, bowl or pan be left out on the porch to receive the milk. The vessel, both before and after the milk is poured into it, is accessible to flies and collects particles of dust and dirt.

Even in the case of bottled milk, however, the consumer must see that the bottle is not left out in the heat for a moment longer than is necessary. Milk should be delivered and kept at a temperature of 50 degrees F. or lower—the colder the better. At such temperature bacteria develop very slowly and milk undergoes little change until consumed. A slight rise in temperature above this point, however, permits bacteria to multiply very rapidly and brings about rapid deterioration of the milk, which may render it unfit for ordinary use, and make it highly dangerous for babies and little children. For this reason bottled or other milk should not be allowed to remain in a warm place, as on a sunny porch or in a hot kitchen for a moment longer than is necessary.

Delivery of Milk in Hot Weather.

In hot weather the best plan is to have the milkman put the milk directly into the refrigerator, because at that time of the year milk cannot be kept properly without ice. If a refrigerator is not available provide a small ice box, and if ice is unobtainable provide some tight container with insulated walls that keep the heat from getting rapidly to the cold milk. A home-made fireless cooker is admirable for this purpose, especially if partly filled with ice. In the absence of any of these devices arrange with the milkman not to leave the milk in the sunlight, but to put it in the coolest shadiest place around the house.

Handling Milk in the House.

In handling milk around the house do not pour it from one vessel to another until it has been consumed. Do not let the bottle of milk remain out of the refrigerator a moment longer than is necessary. Keep the milk covered, using caps or an inverted tumbler on bottles or storing it in covered utensils. Any household utensil that is to be used as a vessel for keeping milk should first be cleaned thoroughly and scalded.

Before opening a bottle of milk, wash and wipe the neck and outside of the cap with water and a clean cloth. The little depression in the top of the cap may collect dust or water and any milk that leaks out may attract flies. Lift out the cap with a pointed instrument, so that the outside of the cap, which may be contaminated, will not be pushed down into the milk. Each time the milk is to be poured from the bottle it is a wise precaution to wash the neck as described.

Milk in a Refrigerator.

The refrigerator where milk is stored should be cleaned regularly, especial care being taken to keep the drip pipe free and clean. The ice rack also should be cleaned and any place where food is kept or milk stored should be scalded occasionally with sal soda solution. The refrigerator, even though cold, may quickly be contaminated by a few drops of spilled milk, or by small particles of food. No matter how clean the refrigerator, milk should never be kept in an open vessel. As milk absorbs odors easily, such foods as fish, cabbage, or onions should not be kept in proximity to it.

As soon as a milk bottle is emptied, rinse it thoroughly with cold water. Do not return dirty bottles and do not use milk bottles except to hold milk. Returning dirty bottles to the milkman may mean a few days later either you or your neighbor will get contaminated milk. Milk bottles should never be taken into a sick room. In case of infectious or contagious disease, all bottles should be boiled thoroughly and should not be returned to the dealer without the express permission of the attending physician. Such diseases easily can be made epidemic through disregard of this caution.

Where There are Children.

Care of milk, important for all, is a vital necessity in a home where there are children. It is absolutely essential to the safety of babies. No intelligent mother will leave to an ordinary servant the task of caring for or preparing the milk for her baby. Mothers of small children should get from their own physicians, explicit directions for the proper handling of milk and for cleaning and sterilizing nursing bottles.

DON'T WORRY ABOUT YOUR FOOD.—EAT IT.

Stop worrying over your food. The milk may be skimmed; the sausage may contain starch; your buckwheat cakes may be mixed with flour and sweetened with imitation maple syrup. The probability is that they won't be, but even if they were they would still be healthful.

Worry over possible adulteration will do you ten-fold more injury than any makeweight or artificial or color can possibly do. The craving for food and the enjoyment with which it is eaten helps digestion greatly—The first flow of gastric juice is due to nerve stimulation. The color or taste of food starts its flow. That is why it is called "appetite juice."

Fear and worry over the daily food has a serious depressing effect upon the digestion. Constant thought of any organ is not beneficial to its condition. To be afraid of what you eat, constantly in doubt and always watching for results, is not conducive to general vigor and normal functions.

If food of a special kind is desirable, it is usually far better for someone other than the person himself to suggest it. If there is no one else to make the choice for you choose the foods you think will serve you best. Eat then with confidence and security of mind; forget about food fraud. It is passing rapidly and what little remains is not likely to hurt your health, though it may injure your pocket-book.

Forget there is such a thing as indigestion. Look forward with confidence to the next meal and enjoy it. Eat all you want and stop when you have had enough—leave the rest to nature.—H. E. Barnard, in New York Evening Mail.

ICE CREAM INVESTIGATION IN PHILADELPHIA.

Examination of 75 samples of ice cream purchased in the open market in Philadelphia has resulted in an official statement from the Dairy and Food Bureau of the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture which gives a clean bill of health for ice cream in that city as far as purity is concerned. The examination of samples was made by Professor Charles H. Lawall, the food chemist and expert of the Dairy and Food Bureau.

Special agents of the Dairy and Food Bureau under the direction of Special Agent, Robert M. Simmers recently took samples of vanilla ice cream from 75 representative places in all parts of the city and they represent a fair average of the ice cream as sold by manufacturers and dealers.

None of the samples was found to be adulterated with foreign fats, preservatives or artificial sweetening agents and there were only three samples out of the seventy-five examined that were below the minimum requirement of 8 per cent. butter fat. Prosecutions were brought in the three cases and fines paid.

The former practice of using condensed skim milk or milk powder in large part in the manufacture of ice cream in Philadelphia has practically been discontinued as the average fat content of the samples examined by Professor Lawall was nearly 12 per cent. or 50 per cent. higher than the minimum legal requirement. Sixteen per cent. of the samples examined contained more than double the minimum butter fat content, several running as high as 20 per cent. and one reaching 22 per cent.

This investigation is of such public importance to the consumers of Philadelphia that it is deemed advisable to give the names or locations where the samples were obtained which were delivered to Professor Lawall and by him analyzed. They were:

DRINK BUTTERMILK.

All bacteria do not make trouble and doctors' bills. Some of them make buttermilk, and buttermilk is a friend to health. It is a cheap beverage and a good one, and is an excellent food besides. Its nutritive value is high, two quarts of buttermilk being equal to about one pound of steak. It has a good medicinal effect. The lactic acid bacteria that help in the buttermilk are, therefore, man's friends and protectors.

But many people are under the impression that to make good buttermilk it is necessary to churn the whole milk for butter. "Skim milk" buttermilk is not only easily and cheaply made, but it has a sharper and keener taste than buttermilk made with whole milk, since it develops its acid faster. On the other side, butter churned from cream alone is better butter, because the cream does not have to be kept as long as the whole milk before churning. Thus skim milk buttermilk has several advantages, especially for the farmer who wishes to make buttermilk for sale.

To make skim milk buttermilk, add one gallon of whole milk to twenty gallons of skim milk as soon as the milk has been separated. This whole milk is added to put some butterfat in the buttermilk, more because people like to see signs of butter in the beverage when they drink it than for any other reason.

Add enough starter or clabber to curdle the milk in six or seven hours when kept at a temperature of about 70 degrees, the ordinary room temperature. When the milk is thoroughly curdled put the resulting clabber in a churn and churn it for thirty minutes.

After churning cool at once to 50 degrees to prevent the further development of acid and separation of whey. Strain as soon as it is cool enough through cheese cloth to remove any lumps of curd. This simple process will give a good, refreshing beverage that is both enjoyable and healthful.—University of Illinois Press Bulletin.

THE STORY OF AMERICAN BUTTER.

The following article by Leon A. Congdon, M. S., Division of Foods and Drugs, Kansas City, is taken from a recent issue of The Creamery and Milk Plant Monthly:

Butter is not a new food product, nor is it the outcome of American ingenuity, but it was used by the Hindus as early as 2000 B. C., both as a food and in their religious ceremonies. Butter as a food product was mentioned by ancient Roman and Greek writers. The Hebrews were ignorant of the art of churning butter, but they made a kind of clotted cream by subjecting new milk to fermentation, which imparted to it a pleasant and acid flavor somewhat resembling that of lemon cream. This was probably the "butter in a lordly dish" which Jael brought to Sisera when she "had opened a bottle of milk" which is mentioned in the Bible. In olden times butter was made by agitating milk in sacks made from animal skins, as is said to be done at the present day in the Pyrenees. There is no question but that modern machinery and scientific methods have worked wonders in butter making, but there is much to be learned as to the chemical and bacteriological changes that are continually going on in the finished product both in regard to changes in storage and also under ordinary conditions.

It is surprising how little is known by the consumer of so common an article as butter. Nearly everyone knows that butter is made from the fat of milk by the churning process, but aside from this fact they cannot tell you much more of the process, nor can they tell you why or how it becomes butter.

The churning of cream to butter depends upon the fact that when cream is vigorously agitated for a time, the globules of fat it contains unite by adhesion to form little, irregular shaped particles of butter. At first these are very small, and like the globules themselves, can only be seen with a microscope; but as the process goes on these particles increase in size until they are visible to the eye, when the churned cream is said to have grained or gathered. Churning, in other words, is a conglomeration of the globules of fat. It is supposed by scientists that the globules in milk and cream, the fat of which is in a liquid state, are surrounded only by a thin layer of liquid milk serum; and it has been found when cream is churned these globules, which are ordinarily circular and of regular outline, harden and assume irregular shapes, with angular, uneven outlines. This change takes place in the large globules first, and does not take place in the smaller ones until the churning has gone on for some time. As a result of this irregular outline and of the agitation, the globules become attached to each other until lumps large enough to be seen are formed. It is thus that no change is perceptible in the cream until it has been churned for some time and that soon after the first perceptible change the butter "comes" almost suddenly. The smallest globules remain liquid at the end of churning and cannot be made to solidify by intense churning. They are therefore lost in the buttermilk.

The favorable results from allowing cream to sour before churning are explained by the above theory put forth by investigators by the fact that the coagulated casein of the sour cream does not present as much resistance to the freedom of the globules as the liquid serum—that is, the capillary attraction of the fat globules is weakened as a result of the clotting or coagulation of the casein. It is quite evident that the temperature at which the cream is churned has much to do with the rapidity with which the butter "comes," and with the proportion of the globules of fat which unite to form lumps, since it has been shown that when milk or cream have been frozen the fat in the globules solidifies and the globules of fat take on irregular forms similar to those formed by agitation or churning. The churning temperature varies widely. It is effected by the season of the year, kind of feed given the cows, condition of the cream and temperature of the churning room. In the spring or summer the temperature should be about 52 to 56 degrees F., and in the fall increased to about 56 to 60 degrees F. The temperature at which cream is churned into butter is considered important by butter makers.

After churning the buttermilk is drawn off from the mass of butter. The butter is then washed several times with cold water, and is then taken out of the churn and "worked" to remove as much of the water as possible. Salt is incorporated into the butter at this time. The butter is then moulded into pound prints or into tubs or crocks as desired.

It has been shown and proven that it is possible * * * * to make butter from day to day of uniform and desirable composition, also that butter of the same composition can be made from either pasteurized or unpasteurized cream * * * *

When butter is kept for some time, especially if much curd or casein is present they saponify and yield free fatty acids, which are soluble and the butter is said to be "rancid." Butyric acid is the most abundant of these acids.

The legal standard for butter is very similar in all the states and is defined as the clean, non-rancid product made by gathering in any manner the fat of fresh or ripened milk or cream into a mass which also contains a small portion of the other milk constituents, with or without salt, and contains not less than 80 per cent. of milk fat and contains less than 16 per cent. of water * * * *

From a legal standpoint the fat content is the most important datum in judging butter and is that which determines the cost of butter production. It may be reduced by the addition of excessive salt or water. For this reason a limit is placed upon the percentage of water which may be present in legal butter, and although no definite limit is placed upon the salt content, it is evident that the numerical requirements for fat and water effectively determine the limit in the amount of salt used. When butter contains above seven per cent. salt it is not only unsatisfactory to the taste on this account, but is usually low in butter fat. When water is present in considerable excess, it is usual for some portion of it to separate on standing, and even when not in excessive amount, water may separate to the extent of one or two per cent.

The flavor of butter is the most important characteristic. A mild, clean, creamy flavor brings the highest score on the markets. A flavor of "old over-ripe cream" is due to an old over-ripe starter, or to the holding of the cream too long at a high temperature before the butter is made. A "cowy" flavor is caused by the uncleanly methods of the producer of the cream before it is made into butter. If the cows are not kept clean and the milkmen careful manure is allowed to get into the milk, and straining will not remove such flavor. During the spring and summer cows sometimes partake of wild onion or garlic, which flavors the milk produced. If this kind of milk is not detected at the creamery and is made into butter it is almost impossible to sell such butter on account of the "garlic" flavor. If too much butter color is used in coloring butter, the butter will have a "butter color" flavor. This cream used in butter making sometimes produces a "sour" flavor in butter.

A factor in the manufacture of butter, the variations of which can be controlled, is the acidity developed in the cream, says a government expert. This factor has long been recognized as important in determining the flavor of butter and as having a decided influence on the constancy with which butter retains its desirable flavor in storage. In producing this acidity, it is recognized that if the fermentation is carried too far the keeping quality of the butter is injured, and also that in over-ripened cream undesirable bacteria may gain the ascendancy and cause deterioration of butter.

The State Experiment station of Michigan, in their investigations on the keeping qualities of butter, conclude that salted butter keeps better than unsalted butter, above the freezing point as well as below, and that salted butter loses more water in storage than unsalted, the loss not being due to evaporation but to leakage. They also found that there are micro-organisms found in butter, able to multiply slowly at 6 degrees below zero Centigrade, in salted butter. Whether these organisms are able to cause deterioration of butter is not certain.

HOUSEWIVES USE PRESERVATIVES.

Information has come to the Department of Agriculture that the canning season had brought the usual demands on the part of housewives for salicylic acid and boric acid. These preparations are sometimes sold in the form of powder under various trade names and are recommended by the promoters for use in preserving canned goods in home canning. In the directions for use the housewife is told to fill the jar with fruit or vegetables, cover with water, and add a teaspoonful of the preserving powder. While it is true that these compounds may retard the decay of the fruit or vegetable, it is pointed out by the experts of the Department that their use may be attended by serious disturbances of health. Salicylic acid is well known as a poisonous substance, and one of the evils which may accompany its use is derangement of the digestion. It is therefore plain that its use in food may lead to disturbances of health and digestion.

The Federal Food and Drugs act prohibits the use of harmful preservatives in foods that enter interstate commerce. The food law of nearly every State of the union forbids the sale within the State of foods that have been preserved with harmful substances. Neither the federal nor the State food laws apply to foods that are canned in the homes and consumed there. It would seem, however, that the housewife would not knowingly use in the food she provides for her family, substances she could not use in foods for sale without violating the law, because these substances are injurious to health.

Fruits and vegetables can be kept indefinitely if they are sterilized by heat and properly sealed, and there is no excuse, in the opinion of the experts of the Department, for running any risk in using preserving powders which may be injurious to health. The use of such powders in addition to the possible injury to health encourages uncleanly or careless work in canning. Reliance is placed on the efficacy of the preserving compound instead of upon cleanliness and heat.

HISTORY AND USES OF NUTS.

Nuts, fruits, milk and vegetables were among the first food of man, and not until men became more highly civilized and lived in houses did they extend their diet to other food. The ancient Gauls who were a very strong and hardy race, lived very abstemiously. Their food was principally milk, bread, berries and herbs. The bread they made from nuts. You may have heard of their very peculiar fashion of wearing a metal ring around their body, the size of which was regulated by Act of Parliament. Any man who outgrew in circumference his metal ring was looked upon as a lazy glutton and consequently disgraced. At a later period we know of the splendid physique of the Roman grenadiers, said to be the finest body of men in the world. Not a single man under six feet in height and what is not often the case in big men, they were said to endure the greatest fatigue and sufferings with patience and calmness. Their food allowance is one pound of black bread and one half pound of oil per man per day. It is not so much what one eats, but the amount one properly digests.

History of the Nut.

In gathering together facts for a lecture, most writers seem to think, and probably rightly so, that the wholly and interesting part of a nut is whether it contains so much proteids, carbo-hydrates, osseids, organic acids, etc., etc., but I take it that it would be more interesting if I leave the more scientific side and deal more particularly with the history, usefulness, even the folk-lore of the nut.

All books on nuts point to their being the most perfect food obtainable, and absolutely free from any contamination, owing to the air-tight cases in which they are grown. Dietically considered, nuts are undoubtedly a most valuable food. Nuts are sometimes termed shell food but are more properly seeds containing generally speaking, no starch, but rich in fats, oils and nitrogenous elements in the form of vegetable albumen and casein. The fat or oil found in nuts is the purest and most digestible fat found in any food, therefore the nut is without doubt of value as an article of food of the first order. Why, then, is it not better known and used? Principally because we have not learned how to utilize it as it ought to be used, or rather we are only just beginning to know again of its existence as a food at all. Speaking broadly it is eaten either improperly or at an improper time, and therefore the nut is blamed for being indigestible.

Its Food Value.

Is the education of this almost perfect food to be left to the doctors and scientists, or are we not more fitted to teach the public the food value of an article we are able to add with profit to the list of goods we handle? Speaking of nuts to a customer is pretty sure to call forth the cry—indigestible. Certainly nuts require special attention to get the best out of them. Being more or less hard and dry they are difficult to masticate, but if treated with time leisure and good teeth to chew the food properly there is not much chance of its disagreeing with one. If swallowed in chunks and not first chewed into a paste the gastric juices do not act upon it and it does not dissolve in the body, but acts as an irritant in the stomach, and disagrees with whatever comes along * * * *. Nuts, of all foods, are most liable to be badly treated by their captors and they won't stand it, for unless properly masticated the warmth and moisture in the body sets up decomposition and indigestion is the result.

How Nuts Should be Eaten.

How nuts should be eaten, in what form and when, are all questions to be answered. A little knowledge of their constituent parts soon answers these queries. Being so rich in food value, a small quantity need only be taken at a time, and, being, as a rule, so full of oil, it is certainly to take them with other food, and for preference, eaten with some hardish food which requires chewing well.

SANITARY FOOD FACTORIES.

The State of Kentucky recently passed a law controlling the sanitary conditions under which food is prepared, manufactured, served, sold or stored. Bakeries, confectioneries, canneries, slaughterhouses, packing houses, creameries, cheese factories, hotels, restaurants, meat markets, and all other places handling foods, must be properly lighted, drained, and ventilated. They must also be conducted with a strict regard to the health of the workers employed, as well as with especial regard to the purity and the wholesomeness of the food produced in these places. No persons suffering with contagious diseases of any kind are permitted to work in places where food is being manufactured, packed, sold, distributed or transported. It is a model law, according to Alice Lakey, secretary of the American Pure Food League. She says in an article in a recent issue of the Osteopathic Magazine that the day has passed when food manufacturers can prepare their foods under conditions that suit themselves regardless of the rights of others.

The consumer has a right to know all the facts regarding the sanitary conditions under which his food is prepared and distributed. The factory, store, market, have to a great extent taken the food industry from the home, hence the consumer has a legal right to know what the conditions are under which his food is made ready for him to consume * * * *. The day is coming when infected food will be as uncommon as outbreaks of smallpox.

The cellar bakeries, even in New York City, are cleaning up. The advent of the big bakeries with their machinery for making and baking bread without contact with human hands means that eventually the dark, unsanitary hole-in-the-ground bakery will have to go because the consumer will choose bread that is baked under sanitary conditions just as soon as he is sufficiently educated in food sanitation to know the difference between clean food factories and those less clean. Food factories need most of all plenty of light where the cleansing power of sunshine can sweep every nook and cranny of the building. This is hard to find in the heart of a great city. More and more food factories will find themselves forced to go a field in search of space and sunshine.

INTEMPERANCE.

Many a person is intemperate in eating while actively engaged in fighting the drink demon. A life insurance expert has warned people against over-indulgence in foods, stating that the man who eats more than he should was a bad insurance risk. The man who is a heavy diner or drinker is sure to shorten his life. He placed alcoholic liquors, however, in the front rank as life shorteners, grading the effects according to the amount consumed each day. According to statistics the abstainer has an average of 15 to 20 per cent. in comparison with the moderate drinker and from 40 to 80 per cent. as compared with the heavy drinker. He, however, cautioned men who were total abstainers against going to the extreme and becoming vegetarians, thereby endangering their health by failure to consume sufficient food to nourish the body.

DANGER IN GOODS SOLD ON STREETS.

When, asks the Osteopathic Magazine, will consumers awake to the perils lurking in toys, candies and cakes sold in the streets to children. There is little doubt that many cases of mysterious illness in children might be traced to street infection through one of these agencies. The great awakening of thoughtful people to the importance of the food supply is indicated by the bequest of Lewis R. Ross, of Rochester, N. Y., who has left $700,000 to the University of Rochester for the study of dyspepsia. Several physicians have not hesitated to express their approval of the bequest. Among the opinions expressed by them are the following:

"Digestive diseases are due primarily to the failure of the people to know what foods are best for their use and the failure of physicians to know what to recommend. Such a department could teach these things. Its work would probably be done in both the laboratory and the hospital ward and would consider cooking, food combinations, relative food nutrition and the adaptability of foods to certain health conditions and to certain people.

"Any study which adds to the fund of human knowledge is a factor for good. Experiments such a department would make would teach the public the value of right food.

"Food values have been pretty well determined but such a department could go deeply into the effects of food on the human system.

"Proper nutrition is the most important factor of life. The chief trouble is that people in general do not know of these experiments or do not pay any attention to them. While the physician devotes all his time to such studies, the layman does none at all."

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

The Commissioner of Foods and Markets of New York City has ordered that after September 1st each egg that has been in cold storage must be marked "cold storage" in letters at least an eighth of an inch high, except when sold in the original packages. The object of the order is to protect the consumer from buying storage eggs as "strictly fresh." Evidently the expense of marking each egg must be paid by somebody, and that will not be the dealer.

A committee appointed by the American Association of Butter Manufacturers at the annual meeting to take up the question of establishing a permanent bacteriological laboratory, has decided to establish the same and a prominent bacteriologist has been engaged to carry on the work. The laboratory will be located in Chicago.

The butter and cheese manufacturing led all other industries in the city of St. Paul during the past five years. An increase of 120 per cent. in the number of employes and a wage increase of 148 per cent. is noted. During the same period the total products increased 52.4 per cent.

Mississippi is rapidly forging to the front as a dairy state. Where two years ago a creamery was unheard of in that state eleven are now in active operation and this number will be increased several times within the next few years according to men who are in a position to know.

North Dakota is making plans by which it expects to become the leading dairy state of the Union within the next few years.

Plans are being formulated for the holding of an annual dairy show at St. Louis. Business men of that city are attempting to show nearby farmers the advantages of dairying, among other things, by pointing out the fact that 80 per cent. of the St. Louis milk supply comes from Illinois.

A new use for a cream separator has been found in the prohibition state of Kansas where it has been put to the task of separating the intoxicating elements in cider from those that have no harm in them. They rise to the top of hard cider in twenty minutes, when run through the separator, just as the cream does when milk is put through it.

The lion is often a factor in circus processions. The fly is too often a factor in funeral processions.—Florida Health Notes.

An outbreak of diphtheria in an English orphanage has been traced to cats. Sixty-nine cases, which were the great majority of those which occurred, came from the boys' house. After many investigations and precautions it was realized that there must be some carrier of the bacillus and the physician in charge decided to turn his attention to the cats, and took swabs from all their throats. On bacteriological examination it was found that the four cats from the boys' side of the orphanage were suffering from diphtheria; the four cats from the girls' side although showing other micro-organisms in profusion did not prove to have the true diphtheria bacillus. The cats were destroyed and after that only ten more cases of diphtheria occurred. They occurred within a few days, showing that the patients had already been affected when the cats were destroyed.

During 1915 the import of nuts into the United States exceeded $40,000,000 in value. This amounts to at least 75 cents per capita consumer's cost.

As long as butterfat in old, stale cream is paid the same price as butter fat in clean, fresh cream many farmers will choose the easiest way.

PURE AND IMPURE MILK.

Most of us know little about the milk we buy, says the Literary Digest. We seldom see the man who delivers it, and we never see the middle man from whom he gets it. As for the actual producer—the man out on the farm—he is enveloped in an obscurity from which he never emerges. He may be clean or very much to the contrary. His stables may be spotless, his cows carefully washed, and his employes beyond cavil. Or he may regard all these precautions as simply a waste of time and money. These considerations are emphasized by Dr. John H. Kellogg in his paper, "Good Health," in an article entitled, "Who's Your Milkman?"

"Somewhere in the small hours of the morning," says Dr. Kellogg, "there is a rattle of wagon wheels on the hard pavement, a tremendous clattering of heavy feet up the back porch, a rattle of bottles as they are deposited on the floor, and a clattering of steps away again. And that is all most people know about the milk they drink." He goes on—

"We pay dearly for our indifference concerning the source of the milk which we buy. We pay for it in tuberculosis, we pay for it in typhoid fever, in colic and other diseases which attack our children, especially in summer. Why, all of these diseases can be wiped out of existence, so far as milk is concerned, the moment people study the milk delivered to them with half the care with which men scrutinize the cigars they buy and women the chocolates they consume.

"Clean milk, obtained from clean cows kept in clean stables, collected in clean receptacles, and distributed in clean vessels, is the choicest of all the infinite products of the laboratory of nature.

"Dirty milk, corrupted with gleanings from sources of pollution, is a veritable poison cup, and is doubtless responsible for the loss of nine-tenths of the three hundred thousand infant lives that every year are sacrificed to ignorance and neglect.

"For it is a well known fact that the germs associated with putrefying filth are the most prolific source of intestinal disorders which annually carry off so many thousands of infants during the summer months.

"These same putrefactive germs are likewise the cause of colon poisoning. Entering the body through the medium of milk, they take up their abode in the colon, where they grow and multiply to the extent of hundreds of billions daily, producing poisons which, when absorbed into the blood, give rise to an almost infinite number of distressing symptoms, and to serious and even fatal diseases.

"Milk must be free from the germs of disease. In addition to the common germs that give rise to putrefaction, milk may contain germs of various specific diseases, such as tuberculosis, typhoid fever, diphtheria, scarlet fever, sore throat, etc., diseases originally derived from human beings suffering from the above named disorders and with the germs with which the milk, by direct or indirect contact, becomes contaminated.

"Milk may also communicate to human beings various disorders that originate in cattle, but which may be communicated to human beings by making use of milk of sick animals, such as foot-and-mouth disease, gastro-enteritis, anthrax and rabies. Modern research has shown that bovine tuberculosis is communicable to human beings. According to Rosseau, it must be conceded that not less than 5 to 7 per cent. of all cases of human tuberculosis is due to infection from the use of infected milk or the flesh of tuberculosis animals."

A precaution in summer, urged by Dr. Kellogg, is to make sure that milk is uncooked. He is not in favor of what is called pasteurization—that is heating it to a temperature of 158 degrees F.—which he regards as destroying certain valuable properties. The boiling of milk modifies in a harmful way nearly all its ingredients and considerably reduces its nutritive value. Further:

"Man has been defined as a 'cooking animal,' and for ages the culinary art has been highly cultivated and made the means, not only of utility, but of harmful luxury.

"Through modern scientific research, we are coming to know that, notwithstanding its great service to the human race, the art of cookery has associated with it many perils, one of the greatest of which, though the most recently recognized, is the destruction of certain vital elements, which so modify the food as greatly to impair its nutrient value.

"Milk, fresh from the bovine font, with its rich store of vitamins and enzymes, with the finest quality of protein for brain and muscle building, salts to stiffen the bony framework and to brighten the vital fires of the body, is a natural product.

"Not only is it not improved by the art of cookery, but it is actually damaged by it and rendered incapable of supplying in the highest degree those subtle elements which are essential to good nutrition.

A word should also be said how to take milk. It should be eaten, not swallowed as a beverage.

"All foods need to be masticated. The calf and the nursing infant chew milk. The movements of the jaws and the sucking movements executed by an infant in nursing induce an abundant flow of saliva, which, mixing with the milk, properly dilutes it, and to a high degree promotes its digestion.

"Milk when swallowed rapidly as a beverage is likely to form in the stomach large and hard curds, which are very slowly digested. Many persons who suffer from taking milk in this way imagine themselves to be unable to take milk, and so abandon its use.

"Milk should be sipped slowly and with a sucking movement of the throat so as to secure a liberal admixture of saliva. By this means the formation of hard indigestible curds may be prevented.

"Milk must also be taken in right quantities and in right combinations. It can not be denied that milk digests better when taken by itself or in very simple combinations than when mixed with a large variety of other food stuffs.

"In some instances a large quantity of milk is more easily digested than a small quantity. When the stomach produces a large amount of highly acid gastric juice, the curds formed when a small amount of milk is taken will be large and tough, whereas if a larger amount of milk is taken, the curds formed will be smaller and also softer.

"It is, of course, impossible for the stomach to make gastric juice that is at once suited for the digestion of meat and for the digestion of milk.

"When milk is largely used as a nutrient, the rest of the diet should consist chiefly of fruits and vegetables for the reason that milk contains an excess of lime and is deficient in potash and soda which are necessary for perfect human nutrition. The last named elements are abundant in fruits and vegetables, and particularly so in the potato.

"A diet consisting exclusively of milk and cereals is less satisfactory. Such a diet often gives rise to scurvy in infants. Cereals are deficient in the alkaline elements that are needed to neutralize acid products developed in the body.

CONCERNING THE COST OF PRODUCING MILK.

The following correspondence between George E. Bartol, a practical dairy farmer, and Dairy and Food Commissioner James Foust, together with a report of some very interesting and practical remarks by Mr. Bartol, before the Agricultural Committee of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce, will prove of practical value to many of the readers of this Bulletin:

Phila., September 15, 1916.

Mr. James Foust, Commissioner, Dairy and Food Bureau, Harrisburg, Pa.

Dear Sir: As I recently based some statements made by me before the Agricultural Committee of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce upon an article published in the "Practical Farmer," which purported to emanate from you, I felt that you would probably be interested in the article which I enclose, being a summary of the remarks made at the meeting above mentioned.

I am glad to note that the United States Department of Agriculture proposes to make an exhaustive investigation of the cost of producing milk and I am to-day sending a copy of the enclosed newspaper article to Mr. W. J. Spillman, of the United States Department of Agriculture, who is, I understand, to conduct the investigation.

I may state that I have some knowledge of this subject, as I operate a dairy farm of over three hundred acres, with a herd of about sixty cows, and the situation from the farmer's side boils down to practically three points:

First. The isolated life led by the farmers, which results in a total lack of co-operation.

Second. The entire inability of the vast majority of farmers to figure costs of production, which are frankly very complex as applied to the production of milk, farmers being wholly unfamiliar with the question of depreciation and the knowledge of how to figure such items as part of the cost.

Third. The urgent necessity of most farmers for the cash produced by the monthly milk check, which is relied upon to take care of all cash disbursements of the farm. This dire necessity for a monthly income compels the great bulk of milk producers to accept practically any price which is offered to them.

Milk, unlike most farm productions, cannot be stored away at point of production, but must be removed from the cow twice a day and it must be immediately shipped, so that, if by any chance, the farmer is without an instant market for his daily product, it must be practically thrown away, as no arrangements can be made for its prompt utilization in other ways.

Yours very truly,

GEORGE E. BARTOL.

September 19, 1916.

Mr. George E. Bartol, The Bourse, Philadelphia, Pa.

Dear Sir: I have your favor of the 15th with clipping, and note carefully its contents.

Do you have any objections to my running your letter addressed to me, together with the summary of remarks by you as printed in the Weekly Graphic, Honeybrook, Pennsylvania, in the next issue of the monthly bulletin?

I consider both your letter and the summary of your remarks quite interesting.

Very truly,

JAMES FOUST,
Commissioner.

SUMMARY OF REMARKS.

Made by George E. Bartol Before the Agricultural Committee of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce.

George E. Bartol, owner of the large Springton Manor Farm, near Glen Moore, and President of the Philadelphia Bourse, recently addressed a meeting of the Agricultural Committee of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce. Although quite lengthy, Mr. Bartol delivered the address without notes. It follows:

The Dairy and Food Commissioner of the Pennsylvania State Department of Agriculture stated recently that there were in Pennsylvania 218,000 farms, with an average of 100 acres to the farm and one million dairy cows.

If the farms be taken at the low average of $50 per acre, including their buildings and other improvements, we have a value of $5,000 per farm, or a total investment in fixed plant of one billion, ninety million dollars ($1,090,000,000).

If the one million dairy cows be figured at the low average value of $80 each, we have a total investment in cows (the milk-producing machines of the dairyman) of eighty million dollars ($80,000,000), and if we further figure the annual product of these milk producing machines (viz.—the cows) at the low figure of $100 each, we have a total annual production of one hundred million dollars ($100,000,000).

The above figures show that the dairy interest of Pennsylvania is a business of no mean proportions and it is one which concerns many other interests, manufacturers, wholesalers, retailers and consumers, any and all who either sell to dairymen or buy their product, the latter including every man, woman and child in the State.

The Dairy and Food Commissioner previously quoted, stated in the same article—"a crisis is slowly coming and something must be done to preserve the future of the dairy cow. Not enough attention is paid to the dairy cow, neither is proper encouragement given to the dairy farmer, for all he gets out of his herd is the manure for the soil."

The crisis referred to by the Dairy Commissioner is the certain bankruptcy of the dairy farmers unless they can secure higher prices for their product.

They are in a true sense manufacturers, their capital is invested in fixed plant, their farms, and manufacturing machinery, their cows. They put their labor into raising food for the milk producing machines and their finished product is raw milk, a prime necessary of human food.

At present and for a number of years past they have been selling their finished product below the cost of production, until to-day the average dairyman is losing one cent to one and one-half cents per quart on every quart of milk sold.

This is the critical situation confronting the dairy farmer, but it concerns all those who lend him money or sell him goods. It is a matter of deepest concern to those who consume milk, as a natural consequence of the general bankruptcy of dairy farmers, followed by the inevitable curtailment of supply will be a milk famine, with famine prices.

The logical treatment to be adopted at this time is a reasonable advance in the prices paid to the dairy farmer, sufficient to put the industry on a healthy basis and insure not only a continuance of a liberal supply of milk, but which would afford the producers sufficient earnings to enable them to improve their plants and produce the milk under the most sanitary and healthful conditions.

No manufacturing business, and producing milk is essentially a manufacturing business, can be carried on continuously at a loss, the end is always the same, viz,—insolvency, and that this is so in dairying is shown by the increasing number of sheriff's sales.

To illustrate graphically why the dairy farmer should have a higher price for the product, because of the increased cost of production, the following figures are given, which have been taken from actual invoices of the writers and show costs in the years named.

Prices paid—Linseed Cake Meal, per ton, 1895, $20.50; 1896, $19.00; 1897, $21.00; 1914, $35.00; 1915 and 1916, $39.00 to $42.00. Cotton Seed Meal, per ton, 1895, $19.50; 1896, $19.00 1897, $21.50; 1914, $33.00; 1916, $41.00. Bran (winter wheat), per ton, 1895, $14.00; 1897, $12.00; 1914, $23.50; 1916, $26.00. Cows, good average cattle, 1895, $40.00 to $45.00; 1897, $45.00 to $50.00; 1916, $75.00 to $85.00. Hired men by the month, with house and privileges, 1895, $25.00; 1916, $35.00. Without house, but boarded, 1895, $12.00 to $14.00; 1915 to 1916, $20.00 to $30.00. Board for men, per month, 1895, $14.00; 1916, $18.00. Day labor—ordinary, 1895, $1.25; 1916, $1.75. Harvest labor (per day) (boarded free), 1895, $1.75; 1916, $2.50 to $3.00. Selling price of milk per quart, at shipping point 40 miles from Phila., freight to be paid by the dairy farmer, 1895, 4 cents; 1896, 4 cents; 1897, 4 cents; 1914, 4 cents; 1916, 4 cents.

The freight amounts to .575c per quart, leaving to the milk producer 3.425c per quart, net case for the milk, which, careful experiments conducted by a number of State Agricultural Departments, has proven to cost at least 5 cents to 5½ cents per quart to produce.

Dairy farmers have found a slow but sure way to certainly and unobtrusively lose money and yet they are scarcely conscious of what is the trouble with their business, because, owing to lack of knowledge and the many items which enter into the calculation they are unable to figure out the cost of production and go along from year to year, selling their product at a loss.

The problem is both serious and complicated. On the one side we have several thousand people, probably close to one million persons, in fact, worthy citizens of this State, engaged in a losing business, yet it is business which is of the utmost importance to the rest of the citizens of the Commonwealth.

Something must be done and promptly done to save the dairying interest from insolvency, or a most serious situation will arise.

On the other side are the millions of consumers of the product of the dairy farms to whom an advance in the cost of this household necessity would be an important matter, and where there were many children, a serious matter, yet on the whole the consumers can better afford to pay to the producers 1½ cents to 2 cents per quart more than to force so many producers out of business as to create a milk shortage, and automatically cause an even greater advance.

The justice of the dairy farmer's cause is admitted. The figures previously given show clearly that the most important of the cattle feeds have advanced about 100% in cost, that cows have advanced about 100% in cost, and that labor employed on the farms has advanced from 50% to almost 100%. As the price received for the milk has remained stationary, it is self evident that all of the advances in cost have come out of the dairy farmer; hence, the crisis in the business which we are now facing.

If milk was not a prime necessity of life, and particularly a necessity for the children, there would probably be no problem to face. The price would be advanced, as has been the case with practically all other products and no questions would be asked. The advance would be accepted as a matter of course and no blame would attach to the producers, who would simply show that the cost of manufacture had increased, but the peculiar relationship of the dairy farmer's product to the daily life of the entire community brings about an anomalous situation and suggests that a complete explanation should be made of the absolute necessity of an advance in the price and that the advance is just.

The question of transportation costs does not enter seriously into the matter as the utmost reduction that might be effected could not amount to more than 1-12 of the advance in price requisite to put the dairy business on a healthy basis. The producer should receive at least $5\frac{1}{2}$ cents per quart f. o. b. cars at his shipping station, if within 100 miles of Philadelphia, the year through.

This price would yield only a fair return on the capital invested and an exceedingly moderate compensation to the dairy farmer for the most laborious and exacting occupation, involving rising daily at 3.30 to 4 a. m. and working unceasingly until 6 or 7 p. m., putting in more hours at hard work every week, including Sunday, than probably any of those who consume the product of his toil.

Mr. George E. Bartol, The Bourse, Philadelphia, Pa.

Dear Sir: I have your favor of the 21st and appreciate your willingness to have reproduced your letter and summary of remarks made by you before the Agricultural Committee of the Chamber of Commerce, Philadelphia, in the next issue of the monthly bulletin.

Yours very truly,

JAMES FOUST,
Commissioner.

"VINEGAR BEES" A WILD YEAST.

Extravagant Claims Made of a Substance Used in Making Vinegar, Beer and Wine.

From "Barrels and Bottles."

The United States Department of Agriculture is receiving many inquiries regarding a substance offered for sale for making vinegar or alcoholic beverages under the names "Vinegar Bees," "Beer Bees," "Australian Bees," "California Bees," "African Bees," and various other designations. These names are being applied apparently, to a kind of wild yeast or ferment which, as far as can be learned, was originated by the mountaineers of Tennessee and Kentucky.

The primitive process for making "bees" was to expose to the air a mixture of corn meal and molasses until it became impregnated with wild yeast and other bacteria. The ferment so produced was employed in making a sort of vinegar or certain alcoholic solutions, by adding it to a mixture of water and either brown sugar or molasses, which then was allowed to work or ferment.

The recent inquiries seem to have been stimulated by enterprising individuals and firms for advertising vinegar "bees" under one or more of the names mentioned. Many of these advertisers make extravagant claims for the product and ask a fancy price for it. Other promoters go so far as to say that the fermented mixture is beneficial in the treatment of rheumatism and kidney trouble, claims which have no foundation in fact.

The Department specialists say "bees" is not as well suited for producing alcoholic fermentation as is the ordinary yeast cake and they can not recommend it all for making vinegar.

ROPY MILK.

From Hoard's Dairyman.

I wish you would inform me as to the cause of some of our milk being ropy. It seems to be just in the bulk milk, and not in the bottled milk. When we leave a quart of milk at a place and it stands over night the cream hangs in a long string like syrup, but it does not affect all customers.

Missoula, Mont.

C. E. Q.

Stringy or ropy milk is due to the action of bacteria which find their way into milk from various sources and are often difficult to eradicate. It is sometimes found that the drinking tank or the tanks where the milk and cream are cooled contain the bacteria which are the source of the trouble. Herds permitted to wade through low places often produce ropy milk. The germ is sometimes carried into the milk through improper sterilization of the milking utensils. When it comes in this way, it is comparatively easy to get rid of, as all of the milk pails, strainers, strainer cloths, and milk cans, in fact everything used in the handling of milk, can be placed in boiling water for a period of ten to fifteen minutes, and this will destroy the germs or bacteria; or, if there is provision for sterilizing with steam, this will also be very efficient.

If the trouble happens to come from other sources than the utensils, such as low and underdrained pastures, about the only way to get rid of the trouble is to keep the cows from the low places and thoroughly wash the udders and flanks with some disinfectant like a solution of chloride of lime or Bacili-Kil. If there is reason to believe that the trouble arises in the tank from which the cattle drink or where the milk is cooled, then these places must be thoroughly cleansed and sterilized.

From the statement made in the inquiry, we would place first suspicion on the milk cans or the cooling tank in which they are set. It would be wise, in any event, to sterilize all the dairy utensils and if the trouble does not then cease, start with the cooling tank, and then proceed down the list to discover where the bacteria may enter the milk.

SLIMY AND ROPY MILK.

BUCHANAN and HAMMER.—Research Bulletin 22, Agricultural Experiment Station, Iowa State College Agr. & Mech. Arts.

This is an exceptionally full study of the subject covering original investigation by the authors, in addition to a systematic presentation of earlier work.

The abnormal fermentation of milk variously termed ropy, slimy or viscous, is of considerable importance in practical dairying particularly in the creamery. It sometimes appears in milk that is still in the hands of the producer. The milk dealer or retailer not infrequently has the condition called to his attention by the consumer. Particularly during the summer months, the milk and cream delivered to the creamery may show this undesirable change and the buttermaker sometimes finds that his starter has developed ropiness instead of undergoing the typical lactic acid fermentation. The makers of Edam cheese in many cases utilizes slimy starters as favorable for this type of cheese, while sliminess is a desirable characteristic sought in certain fermented milk beverages. It is evident, therefore, that ropy or slimy milk and cream, sometimes undesirable, sometimes desirable, are common the world over in the dairy industry, and the organisms bringing about these changes and the conditions of their growth are of considerable practical importance.

The term "ropy," as applied to milk, is to be sharply differentiated from "stringy." This latter condition is present in milk from the udders of cows suffering from mastitis, or garget. The "stringy" character of this milk is due to the masses and threads of fibrin and leucocytes contained. As a result of the inflammation of the udder and the throwing off of blood plasma from the injured surfaces, there is coagulation and formation of fibrin. Bacteria, usually streptococci or micrococci are always responsible for this inflammation, and hence, indirectly, produce stringy milk. The abnormal consistency is, however, not to be attributed directly to bacterial products, but to substances developed by the tissues of the body. In ropy milk, on the other hand, the ropiness or sliminess which develops after the milk leaves the udder is due directly to bacterial products, or to bacteria (or other micro-organisms) themselves.

An attempt is sometimes made to differentiate between slimy milk and ropy milk. Scholl (1891) states that ropy or "thread forming" milk may be identified by the fact that it can be drawn out in long threads, while slimy milk does not possess this characteristic. The differentiation is said to be based largely on the chemical constitution of the viscous materials. In "ropy milk" the viscosity is stated to be due to carbohydrate derivatives, while in "slimy milk" the slimy material is of the nature of mucin. In the present work the terms, slimy, ropy, viscous, and filamentous, will be used more or less interchangeably.

The results are summarized as follows:

1. Cultures of organisms secured from slimy starters, apparently typical Streptococcus lacticus forms, sometimes showed marked capacity to produce ropiness when inoculated into sterile milk. This slime producing power is evidently a variable characteristic, appearing and disappearing without apparent cause.
2. Associative action of organism in some cases is responsible for ropiness. Two organisms, neither of which alone can cause ropiness, may, when grown together, cause the medium to become slimy.

3. Bacterium (lactis) viscosum is one common cause of slimy milk.

4. Certain peptonizing bacteria, as Bact. peptogenes, produce a very slimy residum after digestion of the casein.

5. Bacterium bulgaricum and certain related high acid organisms frequently produce marked viscosity in milk.

Sliminess in milk is apparently due to different causes with different organisms:

1. Gum and gum-like capsular materials partially soluble, or at least swelling in water, are frequently the same.

2. In many cases there seems to be a direct relationship between chain formations of streptococcus and the development of ropiness, likewise between the numbers of bacteria and ropiness.

3. Associative action between two distinct organisms resulting in great increases in number of each is not uncommon as a cause of ropiness.

Methods of control and prevention of slimy milk are discussed.

Keys to the organisms that have been described as responsible for slimy production in milk are presented. An attempt has been made to clear up synonymy. Descriptions of thirty-three species of bacteria that have been found associated with milk are given and the literature reviewed.

PROSECUTIONS ORDERED DURING AUGUST.

One hundred and forty-two prosecutions were ordered during the month of August, 1916, for various infractions of the food and drink laws of the Commonwealth. This is 32 less than the previous month's record. They were as follows:

Under the Ice Cream act one prosecution was ordered in Philadelphia for selling vanilla ice cream low in butter-fat.

Two violations of the Sausage act were reported, one from Philadelphia, the other from Venango County. One was for the sale of Vienna style sausage containing vegetable flour; the other was for selling Frankfurter sausage unfit for food purposes.

Philadelphia furnished all the reported cases of violation of the egg act, nine in number. They were as follows: For the sale of frozen eggs, unfit for food purposes, 2; sale of eggs, opened, in cans, unfit for food purposes, 3; in shell, unfit for food purposes, 4.

Violations of the Pure Food law were reported from Allegheny, Lackawanna, Luzerne, Philadelphia, Schuylkill and Warren counties, as follows: For the sale of cherries containing sulphur dioxide, 1; essence of lemon, about one-half strength containing alcohol and water, 1; orange flavoring, containing alcohol and water, 1; extract of lemon, containing alcohol and water, 2; dried yeast, unfit for food purposes, 1; fresh fish, candy, blackberries, raspberries, hams, all unfit for food purposes, 6 cases, in all.

Nineteen prosecutions were ordered for violations of the Cream and Milk act. Allegheny, Blair, Butler, Luzerne, Northumberland, Philadelphia and Washington counties were represented. They were for the sale of cream low in butter-fat, 5; milk low in fats and solids, watered, 1; milk low in solids, watered, 2; milk low in fat and solids, 2; milk low in fat and solids, skimmed, 3; milk watered, 6.

No less than 99 prosecutions were ordered for violating the provisions of the Non-Alcoholic Drinks act. Allegheny, Bedford, Blair, Bucks, Butler, Carbon, Centre, Chester, Clinton, Delaware, Erie, Lackawanna, Lancaster, Lehigh, Luzerne, McKean, Montgomery, Northampton, Philadelphia, Tioga and Westmoreland counties were represented. A few of these prosecutions were for the sale of an intoxicating beverage as a non-alcoholic drink, but the majority were for the sale of various preparations alleged to be fruit beverages, but actually containing no fruit juice. These represented 94 out of the total of 99 violations reported.

SANITARY INSPECTION OF CREAMERIES AND OTHER ESTABLISHMENTS.

A bill will be presented in the next Legislature providing for the sanitary inspection of creameries, cheese factories, condenseries, canneries and other establishments where food products are manufactured or prepared.

The proposed bill will deal only with food products; the sanitary condition of the building, the equipment, etc.

Many other states already have sanitary laws relating to food and drinks. Dairy and Food Commissioner Foust is securing copies of laws now in force in a number of states and the Pennsylvania bill will be drafted along similar lines.

The agitation in Congress for the inspection of creameries, which is a matter that belongs to the states under the police power, will be looked after by the Food Department of Pennsylvania, so far as this State is concerned, if the proposed bill is enacted into law.

Congress has no police power and all such control should be by the proper departments of the various states.

The proposed bill will also meet the conditions complained about in Philadelphia at the present time and will regulate the handling and display of food products by retail merchants.

Pennsylvania has no sanitary law for the manufacturing, preparation or handling of food products, notwithstanding one is badly needed.

BITTER MILK.

From The Ice Cream Journal.

We have been having trouble with bitter milk, which is delivered by one of our patrons. He claims that it is due to something which the cows eat. Can you give us any information on this point?

Creameryman.

According to H. D. Richmond, in his book on Dairy Chemistry:

"Bitter principles may be derived from the food of the cattle, and some, though not all, of the butyric ferments give rise to a bitter taste. Peptones produced from casein may also be the cause of bitterness."

Professor B. W. Hammer, of the Iowa Agricultural Experiment Station, in a recent bulletin refers to the isolation of a "bitter organism which causes the coagulation of milk beginning at the bottom and gradually extending upward, a bitter taste, an increase in the acidity and eventually a digestion of the curd."

FOOD MAKERS' ORGANIZATIONS AND THE PURE FOOD CAUSE.

Dairy and Food Commissioner Foust, in an interview, said that the food consumer of the present time should familiarize himself with the great aid the various food makers' organizations are giving the pure food cause. For surely if the consumer knew it, he would warmly appreciate the aid such organizations are giving, and would feel inspired to do his share and get greatly added zest and comfort in his eating of factory made foods. The food buyer has long been aware of the skill of the food factory specialist, but there are many points of the factory practice about which he held uncomfortable suspicions.

If there was a time, before the passage of the food laws, when unregulated competition put the food maker or seller who desired to be square with his customer, into a very unpleasant choice of evils, and when he joined with others in organizations quite largely defensive in purpose, that time is well past. The members of such organizations have found that it is far better to make better products, of more carefully selected materials, and under better sanitary conditions, than to outdo each other in cheating the consumer.

Since they have learned this great truth and have given their attention to the possibilities of improvement, these organizations have agreed upon their adoption as conditions of membership, and have urged the enactment into law of requirements far more drastic than most food officials and legislatures, upon their own initiative, would have ventured to propose and enact.

As an illustration of this tendency, the Commissioner called attention to a recent report of the Legislative Committee of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association upon the subject of 'State Food Inspection and Sanitation,' which the committee strongly endorses as advantageous to the manufacturers as well as the consumer. While this report includes an admirable analytical summary of the present condition of legislation upon the subject, and a draft of a proposed 'uniform State law' to govern the sanitary conditions of all food establishments, such legislation is proposed to supplement the existing anti-adulteration and anti-misbranding laws, most of whose provisions relative to sanitation are both vague and not definitely preventive. The Commissioner adds that certainly a reasonable law for the purposes named, is much to be desired.

RULE No. 14, RE-REVISED, CONFECTIONERY AND CHOCOLATE.

Mineral substances of all kinds, whether poisonous or not, are forbidden in confectionery.

The addition of any alcoholic liquor to confectionery is prohibited.

The use of any resinous glaze, which, when mixed or packed with confectionery reduces, or lowers or injuriously affects its quality, strength or purity, or which is substituted wholly or in part for the confectionery, or which is so used as to conceal damage or inferiority, or as to deceive or mislead the purchaser, or make it appear better or of greater value than it is, or which introduces any ingredient deleterious to health, or consists in whole or in part of a diseased, contaminated, filthy or decomposed substance, or which has been produced, stored, transported, or kept in a way or manner that would render said glaze contaminated or unwholesome, is prohibited.

Dairy and Food Commissioner.

PRODUCTS IN STORAGE, SEPTEMBER 30TH.

A general decrease of the amount of beef and increases in sheep and hogs in the cold storage warehouses of Pennsylvania as compared with figures of a year ago are shown in the reports of the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture for September 30.

The reports furnished to the Dairy and Food Bureau by the seventy-one cold storage warehouses of the State show that the high price of beef has caused the curtailment of the amount held in storage for winter sale and that the meat supply will consist of pork, mutton and veal to a larger extent than in former years.

There has also been a decrease of over three and a half million dozen of eggs contained in storage at the present time as compared with the number a year ago. There was no decided slump in the price of eggs during the past summer and this kept the cold storage houses from laying in as large supplies as in former years.

Forty-four cold storage warehouses on September 30 reported 12,220,857 dozen of eggs on hand as compared with 15,903,851 dozen a year ago. On June 30, 1916, there were 15,475,440½ dozen on storage.

Butter holdings remain about the same as last year with 9,555,966 pounds as compared with 9,744,913 pounds a year ago and 5,166,329 pounds in June.

There has been a decrease of almost a million pounds of fish, the present figures showing 3,246,863 pounds. Poultry has shown a decrease of from 1,039,576 pounds last year to 1,931,423 pounds at the present time. Forty-six warehouses show holdings of butter, twenty-one of poultry, fifteen of fish and four of game.

The meat situation shows 64,953 pounds of whole carcasses of beef in cold storage on September 30 as compared with 164,957 pounds a year ago. There are 167,823 pounds of sheep as compared to 70,881 pounds a year ago and 119,845 pounds of hogs as compared with 60,606 pounds a year ago. The veal holdings are now 34,448 pounds compared to 31,824 pounds a year ago.

In parts of carcasses, the beef holdings are 1,043,455 pounds as compared with 938,795 pounds a year ago. Veal parts show 58,950 pounds as compared with 26,724 pounds a year ago and mutton 39,456 pounds against 23,242 pounds a year ago. There has been a wonderful increase in the cold storage holdings of parts of pork, the present figures showing 804,011 pounds as compared with 205,566 pounds a year ago.

But seven warehouses report holdings of whole carcasses of beef and fourteen have parts of carcasses. The veal is contained in six cold storage houses, sheep in seven and whole carcasses of hogs in four, while eight contain parts of hog carcasses.

SWEATING FRUIT MAY VIOLATE LAW.

FOOD AND DRUG ACT PREVENTS INTERSTATE SHIPMENT OF SWEATED IMMATURE ORANGES AND GRAPEFRUIT.

Growers and shippers of oranges and grapefruit are making inquiries of the United States Department of Agriculture in reference to what action will be taken by the Department during the coming season toward preventing the shipment into interstate commerce of immature citrus fruits which have been artificially colored by sweating. The officials in charge of the enforcement of the Food and Drugs Act state they will be guided in their action by the position of the Department previously announced, to the effect that the shipment in interstate commerce of immature oranges and grapefruit, which are sweated either before shipment or en route, is a violation of the Food and Drugs Act when the sweating conceals inferiority by making unripe fruit appear to be ripe. The sweating process turns the green color of the unripe fruit to yellow, and fruit so treated has the appearance of being ripe. However, extensive investigations by the Department have shown that the sweating process does not ripen the immature fruit.

One of the tests to determine whether or not an orange is mature is the so-called "eight-to-one test." This test is based on the ratio of the soluble solids to the acid contained in the juice of the orange. The soluble solids increase as the oranges ripen, while the acid decreases. The oranges are considered immature until the juice contains soluble solids equal to, or in excess of, eight parts to each part of acid contained in the juice. The amount of soluble solids in orange juice is about equivalent to the amount of sugar it contains. The ratio of the sugar to the acid in the juice determines the sweetness of the orange. In the case of grapefruit, maturity is indicated by a ratio of seven parts of soluble solids in the juice to one part of acid. The United States Department of Agriculture will send to any grower or shipper, upon request, specific directions for making the eight-to-one test.

If oranges do not meet this test they are considered immature, and if colored by sweating then it is considered that inferiority is concealed.

The position of the United States Department of Agriculture in reference to the sweating of immature citrus fruits is stated in Food Inspection Decision 133, and in Service and Regularity Announcements of the Bureau of Chemistry numbered 11 and 15, which will be furnished upon application to the Department.

TO PREVENT SOAKED AND ADULTERATED OYSTERS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

With the opening of the oyster season the food and drug officials of the U. S. Department of Agriculture have given notice to those who ship oysters in interstate commerce that they will continue their active inspection to prevent shipment of polluted oysters or shipment of shucked oysters that have been soaked to increase their bulk. This notice applies also to dealers of oysters in the District of Columbia and the Territories, which are directly under Federal supervision.

Those in charge of this work report that the oyster trade in general have expressed a desire to co-operate with the Department in securing a grade of oysters which are free from adulteration of any kind. Many have asked the Department to suggest a method of washing oysters without swelling them to an extent that constitutes adulteration under the regulations.

The Department believes that moderate washing is probably necessary and desirable, but objects to any methods which increases the volume of the oysters to an appreciable extent, either by permitting the oysters to remain in the liquid and absorb the water by the so-called "plumping" method, or by the introduction of an excess of free liquid in the containers in which the oysters are shipped. The Department's answer to such inquiries is that oyster dealers are entirely able to determine for themselves whether or not any particular method of washing results in an appreciable increase in the volume of the oysters or in the amount of juice that normally should be present. Any method which produces appreciable increases should be discarded or modified. Any method that calls for soaking or washing for an excessive period, excessive agitation in water for a short period, or incomplete draining of the washed oyster should be avoided.—From "The Canning Trade."

RENNETS SHOULD BE SAVED.

Rennet extract is prepared from the fourth stomach of young calves. The stomachs of milk-fed calves yields rennet extract suitable for making all kinds of rennet cheese.

As soon as the calf is slaughtered the stomach should be removed and taken care of at once. The fourth stomach, which is the rennet, is cut off at the wide end as close as possible to where it joins the next stomach which is called the book. About two inches of the thick, muscular neck at the narrow end of the rennet should be cut off as it is of no value. The contents should then be squeezed out and any fat that may be on the outside should be peeled off. The rennet should then be slit open so it can be easily salted on both sides. It should not be washed with water but if any food is found it should be brushed or shaken off. Stretch the rennet well and salt heavy on both sides and put away in a cool, dark place to drain. After the rennets have drained they should be hung in a cool dry place with plenty of air circulating about them and after they are dry they should be put in a paper sack until a sufficient number of rennets have been gathered to make a shipment, or made into rennet extract.

Every dairy farmer interested in the welfare of any cheese factory should make an effort to see that no rennets are wasted in his community.

Rennet Extract.

Rennet extract may be prepared by putting several hundred rennets in an oak barrel or keg, splitting them open so the water can get into them. Sufficient water should be used to cover the rennets well. No more water than is necessary to dissolve the ferment should be used. Salt should be added to the water, say four pounds per one hundred pounds of water. The rennet should be stirred vigorously every day and at the end of the week the liquid may be drawn off and the rennets run through a clothes wringer or pounded, then they may be put into the water again of another week and the same operation repeated. Usually in about four or five weeks all the rennet has been extracted.

The extract should be clear but of a dark color and it should be filtered and more salt added, also a little saltpetre should be added. The rennet extract should then be bottled and sealed. Rennet extract so prepared will retain its strength and purity for a considerable length of time if kept in a cool, dark place.—From "The Oregon Dairy and Food Bulletin."

PROSECUTIONS ORDERED DURING SEPTEMBER.

During the month of September one solitary Wyoming county dealer was prosecuted on the charge of violating the ice cream act by the sale of vanilla ice cream low in butter-fat.

Blair county furnished two reported violations of the fresh meat act in September, one prosecution being ordered for the sale of Hamburg steak unfit for food purposes, and one for the sale of sirloin steak unfit for food purposes.

Prosecutions for violation of the non-alcoholic drinks act fell from 99 in August to 10 in September. They were for the following offenses: Selling orangeade, misbranded, artificially flavored and colored, containing no fruit juice, 1; the other 9 cases were for the sale of strawberry pop, raspberry soda, cherry soda and strawberry soda containing no fruit juice.

Under the egg act 13 prosecutions were ordered in Blair and Philadelphia counties. Of these 1 was for the sale of broken egg content, unfit for food purposes; 1 for the sale of eggs in the shell, unfit for food purposes; 11 for the sale of eggs in the shell, unfit for food purposes and not properly denatured.

Allegheny, Blair, Luzerne and Philadelphia counties furnished 15 violations of the pure food law. These were for the sale of boiling meat, breakfast bacon, "meat," hams, fish, potatoes, peanut candy, grab bag candy, currant biscuit, all unfit for food purposes, and "sago," a filthy and contaminated vegetable substance used for making puddings.

Thirty-three prosecutions were ordered for offenses against the cream and milk act. They were alleged to have been committed in Cumberland, Dauphin, Franklin, Luzerne, Montgomery, Philadelphia and Susquehanna counties. Eighteen of these prosecutions were for the sale of milk low in fats and solids. In some instances the milk had been skimmed before sale; sometimes it had been watered.

The prosecutions ordered were 74 in number, or 68 less than the previous month.

COOLING MILK AT THE FARM.

At this time of the year many farmers become careless in the matter of cooling the milk. Some farmers seem to think that as soon as the first cool weather comes there is no more need of using ice. This is just the time of year when they should be notified by the dealers to use extra precautions to keep the milk cool and sweet. The first cool days in autumn are often followed by warm ones and that is the time when a large quantity of sour milk comes to the city.

If the milk is allowed to remain at a moderately high temperature, the bacteria develop very rapidly. Even if kept cool enough to keep the lactic acid bacteria from developing rapidly, other forms of bacteria which give the milk a stale taste and odor may develop rapidly, as they thrive in a slightly lower temperature than the lactic acid forms do. The farmers should be instructed to use ice in the early spring also, to cool the milk as they often postpone it until late in the season.

As soon as the milk is drawn from the cow it should be immediately cooled to 50 degrees F. and kept at that temperature or below until delivered to the customer. It is the farmer's duty to keep the milk cool until he gets it to the car at the station or until the collector takes it from his place. At that time his responsibility ceases, but if he does his duty the milk as long as it is in his hands, much less sour milk will arrive in the cities, especially at this time of the year.

On "muggy" or humid days, such as generally occur at this time of year it is fully as difficult to keep milk in good condition as on the hottest days in the summer.

Dealers who pay for their milk on the basis of quality or cleanliness often pay a premium for milk received below a certain temperature. This reimburses the farmer for the extra expense involved in cooling the product.

Some dealers make a practice of sending their producers circulars reminding them of the necessity of cooling the milk and of using ice, which is a very good plan.—United States Department of Agriculture.

PASTEURIZATION BEST AS A DISEASE DESTROYER.

The following extracts are taken from an address delivered by B. W. Hammer, professor of dairying, Iowa State College, at a convention of the State Association of Buttermakers of Iowa:

Infectious material is spread in various ways, each disease having its own most usual avenues. While various food products play a part in the spread of a number of diseases, we are at this meeting particularly interested in the spread of disease through dairy products.

Our knowledge of the spread of disease through milk goes back to 1857, when an epidemic of what we now believe was typhoid fever occurred in rural England was quite definitely shown by the physician in charge of the cases to have been spread through milk. A farmer who supplied milk to a number of his neighbors had a daughter return from a nearby city. The girl was ill but was able to be up, so she helped with the milking and also with the handling of the milk. In a short time a number of other cases of the same disease appeared among the persons consuming the milk that the girl had handled and it was evident to the physician in charge that the milk was the only medium through which the disease could have been spread.

The infectious diseases spread through milk are commonly divided into two groups:

- (1) Those affecting man only.
- (2) Those affecting man and animals.

The most important of the diseases affecting man only are, in the order of their importance, typhoid fever, scarlet fever and diphtheria. Milk is contaminated with the infectious material of these diseases in a number of ways, but practically always, either directly or indirectly from human sources. Common sources of infectious material, at least in the cases of typhoid fever and diphtheria, are "bacillus carriers." These are persons who are harboring and eliminating infectious material, and who themselves are not sick; they have either recovered from the disease or have sufficient body resistance to prevent the usual action of the infectious material. Milk has frequently been infected when a person acts as a nurse and at the same time handles milk. Infected water used for washing utensils, bottles returned from households having cases of disease and various other conditions may also be responsible for infected milk.

In determining whether or not a given milk supply is responsible for an outbreak of disease like typhoid fever, there is usually no attempt to isolate the organism from the milk. The isolation of disease producing bacteria from milk is a difficult problem, and, moreover, it is very likely the disease producing organisms are not present in every lot of milk. A much more fruitful method is to study the distribution of the cases with reference to their water supply and their milk supply, when the cases are largely arranged along a certain milk supply and have nothing else in common, the milk supply should be regarded with suspicion. Certain other characteristics of milk borne epidemics such as the explosive nature of the outbreak, the great prevalence among milk drinkers, etc., enables the investigator to confirm his suspicions, although it is always desirable to find the actual source of the infectious material.

It has been definitely established that the organisms of typhoid fever and diphtheria can grow in milk when the milk is held at a favorable temperature. This makes the contamination of milk with the organisms of these diseases particularly dangerous since heavily infected milk may result from the entrance of a comparatively few organisms.

The most important of the diseases affecting man and animals is tuberculosis. Although we recognize a difference between the organisms ordinarily causing tuberculosis in cattle and the organisms ordinarily causing tuberculosis in man, we also recognize that the cattle organism can cause the disease in man, especially in children.

* * * It seems reasonable to suppose that dairy products play a part in spreading tuberculosis, since it has been shown that the organism causing this disease quite commonly gets into the milk.

Farm animals fed on unpasteurized dairy by-products are known to sometimes be affected with the organisms of tuberculosis. A number of states * * * recognized this and required the pasteurization of one or more of such products as skimmed milk and whey. In the past, however, states have not seen fit to require the pasteurization of dairy products intended for human consumption. * * *

The two ways in which the spread of disease through dairy products are: (1) by preventing the entrance of infected material; (2) by destroying the infectious material through pasteurization.

SKIMMILK AND ITS USES.

The following is taken from an address by John Philip Street, chemist of the Connecticut Experiment station, delivered before a recent convention of the National Association of Dairy, Food and Drug Commissioners:

In these days of high food prices, rapidly increasing population and threatened diminished production in our beef supply, the conservation of any food material, especially an animal food, is of the greatest importance.

The main sources of this supply are meat, eggs, milk and milk products. Meat possesses the unique advantage of being the only form of animal food that man can continue to take with pleasure in sufficient quantity to satisfy the body's demands for albumen.

Whole milk naturally suggests itself as a relatively cheap source of animal protein, but the often condemned, rarely appreciated skimmilk is even cheaper for this purpose. Its composition naturally is affected by the process used for its production. Many of the states provide that milk containing less than the standard amount of fat is skimmed milk and therefore adulterated milk. The Federal government and those states which have adopted the federal standard are confronted with the necessity of condemning as skimmilk rich Jersey milk from which a portion of the fat has been removed to permit the producer to compete with milk of lower but still standard quality. This anomalous condition will continue just so long as milk continues to be sold on the irrational basis regardless of its composition and its richness.

The prejudice against skimmilk is apparent in some of our state laws. It is this removal of fat, this apparent debasing of the product, that has brought upon skimmilk undeserved and unintelligent opprobrium. Skimmilk, of course, must not be sold as whole milk, or skimmilk cheese as whole milk cheese, or frozen condensed skimmilk as ice cream. But here we have a valuable food product in a peculiarly digestible form, a most valuable culinary adjunct, whose sale is discouraged in practically every state in the Union, whose sale is prohibited under any conditions in the great cities of New York and Brooklyn, and whose sale when permitted is hampered by such restrictions as to discourage both the seller and the buyer of the product.

At least 1,600,000,000 pounds of butter are made annually in this country, and from this are obtained about 28,000,000,000 pounds of skimmilk, and about 2,000,000,000 pounds further are obtainable from cream sold as cream; 30,000,000,000 pounds annually of a useful, valuable, nutritious and digestible food, the sale of which is discouraged almost universally by restrictive legislation.

It has been pointed out that in Germany 25 cents will buy 538 food units in the form of beef, 552 in poultry, 1,614 in whole milk, 2,311 in buttermilk, and 2,562 in skimmilk, and yet with us this valuable food product is largely a calf food, pig food or chicken food. So great is the popular prejudice that in many localities it can be purchased only with extreme difficulty.

As an illustration of the nutritive and economic value of a combination of skimmilk and bread let me cite the comparison made in a farmer's bulletin of the United States Department of Agriculture, between a lunch made of bread and skimmilk and an ordinary lunch as supplied by a restaurant. Eight ounces of bread and one pint of milk yield 859 calories with 0.09 pound of protein for five cents, while a lunch of eight ounces of soup, two ounces of beef, two ounces of potatoes, one ounce of bread, 0.5 ounces of butter and 1.50 ounces of coffee with milk and sugar yields about the same number of calories, 865 with 0.05 pounds of protein for from 15 to 20 cents. The above simple lunch of bread and milk yields about one-third of the required daily nutriment at a cost of only five cents. In the penny luncheon supplied to the Boston school children one of the successful combinations was skimmilk, bread and butter.

The second form in which skimmilk may be used is in the form of milk powder. There are two general methods of production: (1) Drying on steam-heated rotating drums, and (2) spraying the milk into a chamber through which a current of warm air is passing. These milk powders, of course, may represent milk of different degrees of skimming. Aside from the convenience of these milk powders in the home or in the camp their keeping qualities and freedom from bacterial contamination still further emphasizes their usefulness and value as food products. * * *

Skimmilk cheese is another form in which skimmilk may come into popular use. Undoubtedly in the past there have been grave abuses in the sale of skimmed or partially skimmed milk cheese as full milk cheese. This form of commercial dishonesty, however, should not cause us to lose sight of the great nutriment value of cheese of this sort. The State of Washington considers any cheese containing less than 30 per cent of milk to be "skimmed cheese," and prohibits the sale of any cheese containing less than 15 per cent. of milk fat, except certain specified fancy types. In the manufacture of American cheese of the Swiss type, for instance, it is often impossible to use whole milk and obtain a product that can compete with the foreign article. In this instance a partially skimmed milk cheese yields a superior product, and yet this superior product under certain laws and regulations must be stultified by the label "skimmed milk cheese." * * *

Condensed skimmilk is still another commercial form in which skimmilk may be purchased. In some states its sale is prohibited altogether, in others a label is required stating it is not intended for infants' use, but in most cases it may be sold under its true name. There is no reason why this product should not find the same wide use suggested for the uncondensed article. * * *

MILK TOPICS OF TRADE RELATIONS.

One of the most important items which attract our attention when we seriously contemplate the effects which modern methods of living have produced in civilized society, is the tremendous wastes which seem to be necessary accompaniments of the tide of men which is flowing with increasing force toward the city and the larger centers of population—wastes, not only of material, which have been prepared for use and are then for any reason unused or lost, but also the wastes which always occur even when there is no interruption of the intended use of materials.

All of the material things which men most desire, whether it be things for manufacture, clothing for wearing, or food to eat, is derived primarily from the land. Men look for it either in the ground or from the plant and animal life which is supported by the land. As men become concentrated in numbers and so create cities, those persons who are personally attached to the soil, and so obtain from the land the necessary raw materials, become proportionate fewer in numbers. While the actual number of such men may be constantly increasing, this increase is not as great as is that of those who are living in the cities and the larger centers.

Following the tide of men flowing from the country toward the cities, there is another tide which carries upon its crest, among other things, food for the use of the city population. The food grown upon the soil takes from it the elements which supply nutriment to the plant, and unless these elements are returned in some way the land becomes impoverished. In America where the western lands produce with such abundance and require but little fertilization this drain upon the land was not so noticeable, but it must be evident that no land, be it ever so fertile, can continue to give out without receiving an equivalent in return. Therefore, the food producing part of our population should strive to produce these foods which will impoverish the soil to the least extent and they should try to retain or return to the land those elements which will enable it to retain its fertility. * * *

When most foods are consumed in the cities, they are a complete loss to the land that produces them as far as fertility is concerned. Our city sewers ravenously swallow up all the man and animal waste and pour this flood of fertility into the sea. Future ages may recover some of it but the present age is losing it.

FOOD MANUFACTURERS CAN BE TRUSTED.

It is high time for food manufacturers, brokers, jobbers and retailers to get together and tell the public whom they serve something about food which will be helpful and pleasant. I deplore the flood of poor food publicity which now infests the public prints. Years ago there seemed to be occasion for howling about food adulteration and food fraud. If there ever was need to frighten the consumer and to compel legislation, I know it is not now necessary to frighten folk over their food supply.

I am trying to reassure the consumer, so that he can sit down to dinner without wondering whether it is better for him to die of starvation or food poisoning. The public must be taught to trust its food, not to fear it, and the writer on food subjects who gleefully weaves tales about food adulteration at so much a thousand words, or points his accusing finger at the convicted manufacturer, the narrator of dreadful stories of rotten eggs, embalmed beef, polluted oysters, plaster of paris bread and diseased milk must be forced from his muckraking.

A food industry cannot go forward bearing the burdens of libelous publicity. It is up to the press to co-operate in the campaign in behalf of a well nourished public. It falls far short of co-operating when it accepts money for pure food advertising at the cashier's desk and sends out from the editor's desk a nauseating, untruthful story of food poisoning.

I am sick and tired of all this talk about debased food. With all my chemists and inspectors I cannot find it. The food manufacturer can be trusted as fully as any other businessman. That is optimism for you, but it is optimism based on many years contact with the people who make food and sell it.—H. E. Barnard, Indiana State Food and Drug Commissioner, in the New York Evening Mail.

OUR DAILY BREAD.

From The American Food Journal.

For weeks bread has been given more space in the news columns of the daily papers than any one other topic, aside from the war and the November elections. * * * The quantity of the matter on this subject appearing in the papers does not surprise the sophisticated reader. Reporters who cannot make good stories out of ordinary happenings are not recognized as capable. But there is much that is surprising in the flood of reports, comments and suggestions. Now and then there is a half column, more or less, that well might serve the text book makers as an excellent specimen of unconscious humor.

Nearly all food products are high at this moment, many of them influenced by reports of crop damage and threatened shortage of product. Wheat and flour began to advance in the market quotations with the first show of disturbing conditions in the early estimates of crop reduction. As the advices continued, progressing from the apprehension of danger to certainty of loss and a shortage of millions of bushels, the prices climbed. The needs of the country are known. The supply, if correctly reported, represents a year's production that must serve until another crop is harvested. Whether the market has felt the fever of speculation rather than the stimulation of legitimate demand is a question not pertinent to this inquiry. Wheat is higher than it has been for years; flour has touched a mark above every record save those of the days of the Civil War and a depreciated currency.

With these facts in view there is nothing astonishing in the announcement by the bakers that they must advance the price of bread or make smaller loaves. It would seem a matter of course. Eggs double in price in the winter months, because poultrymen have not yet learned how to induce their hens to lay in cold weather. Butter formerly fluctuated in price in the same way, and at the same seasons, because pastures are dry in the fall and hay is not a perfect substitute for green clover. When the prices advanced the public grumbled, but accepted the higher prices as seasonable inflictions that must be endured. The public will do the same thing in this time of higher prices for bread. The struggle for increased business will bring prices down when conditions are suited to the change.

Of course there was much talk of governmental investigation, which was very well, so far as the government officials were concerned, but not very well so far as ill-informed newspaper writers regarded it. The government, acting under the Sherman law, would quickly restrain any combination or conspiracy formed to control prices, but it could not say how much bread a baker should sell for a nickel. Municipal authorities have power to adopt, as many have adopted, a standard of weight for loaves of bread, but they cannot fix the price at which they must be sold. At least, not in times of peace and quiet. This should have been made plain to readers, yet rarely indeed did any newspaper put the matter clearly.

Now and then some bright young man asserted that housewives would go back to baking bread in their own ovens. This, immediately following the statement that the large loaf suggested by the bakers as a standard size at ten cents, was too big a supply for the ordinary family and would dry up, become stale and useless before it could be consumed. The picture of a housewife making and baking a single loaf of bread, buying the materials and paying for the fuel to heat the oven, to economize in producing a 6-cent loaf for less money was not convincing.

Some investigators claim that the bakers have contracts with the millers, made before prices for flour advanced, and consequently do not need to raise their rates for bread. There are such bakers, but not enough of them to have any effect upon the flour market. There are wheat growers who have garnered a good crop, in spite of the crop damage which has afflicted their neighbors, but they are not numerous enough to influence the general crop reports.

There is this consolation—Bread, the staff of life, at 6 cents a loaf is still the cheapest food in the market. Compared with most other eatables on the daily bill of fare, it gives more nourishment for a cent than can be had for five cents otherwise expended.

OUR OYSTER CROP AND SALMON PACK.

Flesh and fowl may fail us, but America's fish supply is going on forever, according to the censuses of the finny tribes which inhabit our lakes, streams and coast waters, from Alaska to the Florida Keyes. Dr. Hugh M. Smith, the leading authority in this country on the subject, tells of America's surpassing fisheries in a communication to the National Geographic society.

He states that with the acquisition of Alaska there came to us marine resources of such transcendent value as to overshadow all other natural products and to give the United States fisheries the leading place among the nations.

The creatures which support our fisheries are not all fish, but belong in various classes, some of those contributing most notably to the importance of the industry being crustaceans and mollusks. The total value of our fisheries at the present time is approximately $76,000,000 annually.

Among the fishery products in which America is pre-eminent, the most conspicuous is the oyster. This, our most important aquatic resource, is not only more valuable than in any other country, but more valuable than that of all other countries combined. The American oyster has the further distinction of being a staple food of comparatively low price while in practically every other country having a well developed oyster industry the oyster is a high priced luxury. Its commanding position is shown in the fact that it is a commercial commodity in every coastwise state except two (Maine and New Hampshire); that it is the leading fishery product in fifteen states, and that it is the most extensively cultivated of all our aquatic animals. The annual oyster crop in the United States is about 35,000,000 bushels.

The salmon resources of the Pacific states are among the natural wonders of the western hemisphere, but they now take rank after those of Alaska, whose fisheries as a whole have experienced their remarkable development and attained their present surpassing importance chiefly because of the salmons. Since Alaska became part of the national domain the total value of the products taken from the waters of the territory up to the present year has been nearly $300,000,000; the fishing industry reached its climax in 1915 with a value of $21,000,000, three times the purchase price of Alaska.

TO PREVENT SOAKED AND ADULTERATED OYSTERS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Washington, D. C., September.—With the opening of the oyster season the food and drug officials of the U. S. Department of Agriculture have given notice to those who ship oysters in interstate commerce that they will continue their active inspection to prevent shipment of polluted oysters or shipment of shucked oysters that have been soaked to increase their bulk. This notice applies also to dealers of oysters in the District of Columbia and the Territories, which are directly under Federal supervision.

Those in charge of this work report that the oyster trade in general have expressed a desire to co-operate with the Department in securing a grade of oysters which are free from adulteration of any kind. Many have asked the Department to suggest a method of washing oysters without swelling them to an extent that constitutes adulteration under the regulations. The Department believes that moderate washing is probably necessary and desirable, but objects to any method of excessive washing which increases the volume of the oysters to an appreciable extent, either by permitting the oysters to remain in the liquid and absorb the water by the so-called "plumping" method, or by the introduction of an excess of free liquid in the containers in which the oysters are shipped. The Department's answer to such inquiries is that oyster dealers are entirely able to determine for themselves whether or not any particular method of washing results in an appreciable increase in the volume of the oysters or in the amount of juice that normally should be present. Any method which produces appreciable increases should be discarded or modified. Any method that calls for soaking or washing for an excessive period, excessive agitation in water for a short period, or incomplete draining of the washed oysters should be avoided.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

There were nearly 95,000,000 pounds of fish taken from the waters of California and along the coast during 1915, according to the annual report of the State Agricultural Society, completed recently by the state statistician.

The plan of interesting bankers and others in the dairy industry seems to have originated in Texas where a movement was started several years ago to loan money to farmers for the purpose of buying cows, and much good work has been done in that state and many carloads of cows have been shipped into the state of Texas. Since the Texas movement other states have followed a similar plan and today in many sections, even in the dairy states, where the bankers and others are ready to loan money to farmers for the purpose of buying stock a great deal of good has been accomplished.

Tapioca is getting over its bad name. A few years ago, according to the New England Grocer and Trader, the word suggested prunes and hash and nothing else except a long noisy boarding-house table. Slippery little globules of a marvelous toughness, floating in a thin, pale yellow custard or else mixed with a watery apple sauce, very soon got monotonous. But now that manufacturers have learned to put up tapioca in smooth flake instead of lumpy spheres, and cooks have learned to serve it to advantage, it is quite in demand. Nothing else makes such a good substitute for part of the cream in a rich ice cream, and no other thickening gives such a good flavor to puree soup.

The New York State Department of Foods and Markets some time ago issued a notice that all cold storage eggs had to have the words "Cold storage" stamped upon the shells of each individual egg. This proposed legislation has been canceled, as the burden placed upon the cold storage houses or those who have eggs in storage, in taking out all the eggs and stamping each one individually, would add to the cost of the eggs and be a detriment to the consumer. As a consequence of the protests that have been made against this rule the stamping regulation has been abandoned and the words "Storage eggs" now only need to be printed on the cases.

The present high price of beans has encouraged the Southern Rice Growers' association to urge the United States government to use rice more liberally as a staple ration for the troops on the Mexican border and in the field, and to this end the association proposes to send expert rice cooks to the camps to demonstrate the various ways in which rice can be prepared.

The dairy products of the State of Wisconsin are valued at more than $100,000,000 a year. During 1914 the cows of the state furnished the market and furnished a high price for many of the crops. The dairy cows of Wisconsin paid $5,000,000 for silage. The milk from the cows was made into 180,000,000 pounds of cheese. The butterfat yielded 131,000,000 pounds of butter, for which the farmers received throughout the year an average of 27 cents a pound.

Cream should be graded in order to produce a better quality of butter. Thousands of pounds of poor butter on the market today, according to the dairy authorities at Pennsylvania State College, are due to poor raw material. Every creamery to do justice to itself and its patrons should grade cream. First grade should be cream low in acid, clean as to taste and smell. Second grade cream might be slightly sour to the taste or slightly tainted in flavor. Cream that is rancid, moldy, stale, has cowy flavors and contains foreign matter should be rejected and not made into butter. A creamery which pays for cream on a quality basis and rejects poor quality raw material will in most cases be able to pay from three to five cents more per pound butterfat, due to the higher prices it may command for its butter, than a creamery accepting inferior raw material.—Philadelphia Press.

Recently the Illinois Steel Company, in order to reduce its accident and indemnity losses, installed in conspicuous places throughout its works electric signs asking that pointed question: "Did booze ever do you any good—help you get a better job—contribute to the happiness of your family?" Milk vendors now make regular trips through the works, supplying the men with a better beverage than beer. By an educational campaign, and by taking away one of the incentives for drinking the company hopes to reform its drinking workmen. Those who persist in drinking will lose their jobs. The milk vendors sell 1,400 quarts of milk a day in the steel plant and fourteen saloons in the immediate neighborhood of the plant were forced to go out of business.

First official figures of the pack of Alaska salmon, given out recently in Seattle, show a shortage of at least 1,000,000 cases of pinks, while the shrinkage in the output of Alaska red salmon and British Columbia sockeyes also is recorded.

The purity of milk is tested in Germany in a simple way. According to the Spatula, a polished knitting needle is held upright, dipped in the milk and immediately withdrawn. If the milk is pure some will adhere to the needle, but if water has been added, even in small proportions, it will come forth quite clean.

The marketed production of salt in 1915 in the United States, including Hawaii and Porto Rico, was 38,231,496 barrels, or 5,426,813 short tons in quantity, and $1,550,269 in value.

In 1915 salt was produced in fourteen states from New York to California and salt of all grades was made—lump salt used in salting cattle to the finest for the dairy and table. It is produced from both natural and artificial brines. It is derived from the water of the Great Salt Lake and from that of the Pacific Ocean. In New York, Michigan, Kansas and Louisiana it is mined as rock salt.

Recent figures published indicate that Cuba's sugar crop in the present year will be somewhat in excess of the estimate of 3,000,000 tons that has been the consensus of opinions of experts, and will surpass by approximately 500,000 tons the largest previous production. As an indication of the prosperity and rapid expansion of the sugar industry in Cuba it is announced that there will be sixteen new mills grinding in the crop of 1916.

An American owned and operated egg preserving plant has been established in Shanghai, China, and is handling 300,000 eggs daily. The product is either frozen or dried and shipped to the United States, at present via the Pacific coast. The frozen product is divided into three classes, whole eggs, egg yolks and whites of eggs. The dried product consists of whole eggs and egg yolks. In both instances the eggs are churned or scrambled. The albumen is largely used in the manufacture of candles in the United States, while there is a demand for the frozen product in bakeries and hotels.

FACTORS AFFECTING THE YIELD AND QUALITY OF PEPPERMINT OIL.

The effect on the yield and quality of peppermint oil of cultural and climatic conditions is discussed in professional paper No. 454, by Frank Rabak, Chemical Biologist, Bureau of Plant Industry. This bulletin, recently published by the United States Department of Agriculture, is based on experiments in raising and distilling peppermint plants conducted from 1908 to 1912. Conditions of soil and climate, the author finds, are influential factors in the formation of oil and its constituents in the peppermint plant. Light sandy or loamy soil appeared to be most favorable for the production of an oil of high quality.

Distillation experiments were conducted with a view to determining the effect on oil yield of drying the plants previously to putting them in the stills. It was found that the yield of oil from fresh plants apparently decreases as the plant matures. Drying the plants before distillation results in a considerable loss of oil. The largest proportion of oil is found in the leaves and flowering tops. In experiments in distilling plants and parts of plants at different times of growth, the author found that the percentage of esters in the oil, which give the oil its fragrant minty odor, increases as the plants approach maturity. The menthol content of the oil bears a close relationship to the ester content. The free acidity and ester content of the oil distilled from dry plants is considerably higher than in the oil from fresh plants. The drying of the plants causes conditions favorable to making esters, while the percentage of free and total menthol in oil produced from dried plants is also uniformly high. It was found also that the formation of esters and menthol takes place most readily in the leaves and tops of the plants.

In another test it was found that the effect of shade upon the peppermint plant is to decrease the making of esters and the formation of menthol. Experiments with plants allowed to freeze indicate that frost noticeably increases esterification and the formation of menthol.

STUDY FEEDING VALUE OF PLANTS.

The recent annual report of the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, United States Department of Agriculture, shows that much work of a research nature has been done during the past year on the chemical composition of various cereals and other plants in order to form the basis for practical nutritive experiments. The proteins of the plants have been analyzed and new constituents discovered in some of them. The feeding value of plants has heretofore been estimated largely on the basis of the protein they contained. Investigations have shown, however, that the proteins in various grains and other feeds differ greatly in composition. Two cereals which contain approximately the same amount of protein may vary much in feeding value because the protein in one of the cereals contains certain constituents necessary to nutrition which are lacking in the proteins of the other cereal.

A new protein has been found in the nitrogenous compounds of kafir corn. The composition of this new protein has been determined. It contains the amino acids lysin and tryptophan, both indispensable to the normal nutrition of animals. These are not found in the proteins of maize. Now that this is known, the report states, a rational attempt can be made to learn how kafir may be fed to make it no less valuable than maize.

The peanut has been found to contain an abundance of diamino nitrogen. This form of nitrogen is indispensable to the normal nutrition of animals and is contained in inadequate amounts in the common cereals from which most feeds are derived. Peanut press cake should therefore prove to be an easily accessible material to make such cereal feeds more efficient, the report states. Practical feeding tests will be made in co-operation with the Bureau of Animal Industry.

The proteins of cottonseed, jack bean, tomato seed, cow peas, corn, corn germ, and wheat have been determined and studied. Many analyses of forage plants of the arid and semiarid West were made for the Bureau of Plant Industry.

A CATECHISM ON EGGS.

We print below a series of questions and answers which cover pretty nearly every conceivable inquiry that might come up on the question of eggs. This splendid catechism was prepared some time ago by Septimus Mawer, chief inspector of the Ohio Dairy and Food Commission, and was printed in a bulletin of that commission for distribution to the dealers of Ohio. We reprint it here without change, except as to reference to law and penalty for violations which have been changed to conform to South Dakota law. The opinions expressed by Mr. Mawer in regard to the methods of marketing eggs agree exactly with the stand the South Dakota Food Commissioner has taken for several years. We have not yet in South Dakota sufficient cities to warrant any extensive development of the selected market egg idea, but there can be no doubt that improvement in the breeds of poultry, with the elimination of mongrel flocks, and care in handling and marketing the eggs will result in better prices to the producers and better and more palatable and wholesome eggs for the consumer.

1. What is an egg? Answer: Analysis tells us that an egg contains the same constituents, practically, as corn and wheat, but has a larger proportion of protein. To the chemist, the egg is simply water, protein, fat, ash, etc., the same as wheat and corn. The only difference between a bushel of wheat and a bushel of eggs is that the eggs are more palatable and nutritious. They are also more valuable when placed upon the market. Without the shells one dozen eggs contain 13.57 ounces water, 2.32 ounces protein, 2.26 ounces fat and .22 ounce ash. A pound of eggs is worth 10 to 50 cents, depending on the time of year and the markets, a pound of wheat being worth from 1 to 2 cents. By giving the wheat to the hen to market, it is converted by a delicate process of manufacture into a form of food so palatable and wholesome that it commands 10 times as much as when it was in the bin or grain sack. In selling eggs at 40 cents per dozen the poultryman is receiving 25 cents for water.

2. What is considered a fresh egg? Answer: An egg, to be accepted as a first, or fresh, egg, must be newly laid, of normal size, clean, and show a very small air cell. The contents of a fresh egg completely fill the shell, and when candled are perfectly clear and free from discoloration.

3. What is the air cell of an egg? Answer: A bubble of air generally appearing at the large end of the egg, due to shrinkage or evaporation of the contents of the egg.

4. How can the age of an egg be determined? Answer: By exposing the egg to a strong light or by candling. The air-cell becomes larger as the egg ages. The age of an egg may also be determined by immersing in brine; however, it is not a practical method.

5. Is it a violation of the law to sell rotten or partly incubated eggs? Answer: Yes; Section 5, Chapter 163, laws of 1909, provides that food is adulterated if it consists wholly or in part of filthy, decomposed or putrid, animal or vegetable substance. Eggs come under this provision.

6. What is the penalty for selling bad eggs? Answer: Not over $50 for the first offense and not more than $100 or imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding 30 days or both, for each subsequent offense.

7. Are the eggs that have been tested from an incubator considered unfit for food purposes? Answer: Yes, and any person selling such eggs for food purposes is violating the law.

8. When is an egg considered suitable for food purposes? Answer: When it shows no signs of incubation or decomposition, such as blood rings, spot rots, black rots, etc.

9. How can you determine when an egg is suitable for food purposes? Answer: By candling it.

10. What is meant by candling eggs? Answer: Candling is a process of testing eggs by passing light through them, so as to reveal the condition of the contents.

11. What are blood rings? Answer: Blood rings are eggs in which the embryo chick has developed to a sufficient extent so that it is quickly recognized when held before the candle.

12. What is known as a black rot? Answer: This is the easiest class of rots to recognize and consequently the best known. When the egg is held before the candle, the contents have a blackish appearance. The formation of hydrogen-sulphide gas in the egg causes the contents to blacken and gives rise to the characteristic rotten-egg smell and sometimes causes the egg to explode.

13. What is white rot? Answer: These eggs have a characteristic sour smell. The contents become watery, the yolk and white mixed, and the whole egg offensive to both sight and smell. It is also known as the mixed-rot.

14. What is a spot rot? Answer: A spot rot is a rot that has not contaminated the entire egg; bacteria have developed and remained near the point of entrance. Such eggs are readily detected by the candle, as a dark unmovable spot is plainly seen, and when broken show lumpy particles adhering to the shell. They are also called mold spots.

15. What is the appearance of a blood ring when exposed to a candle. Answer: Generally circular in form and looks like a small red thread.

16. What are heated eggs? Answer: Eggs in which the embryo has proceeded to a stage corresponding to about 18 or 24 hours incubation. In the fertile egg, this condition can be recognized by the increased color of the yolk; when held before the candle it will appear heavy and slightly darker than the fresh egg. They are also known as light floats.

17. What are watery eggs? Answer: Eggs in which the inner membrane of the air cell is ruptured, allowing the air to escape into the contents of the egg, giving a frothy or watery appearance.

18. What are weak eggs? Answer: Those in which, by reason of unfavorable conditions or of age, the stiffness or viscosity of the egg white is lessened, producing an egg which does not stand up well or whip into a froth.

19. What is an infertile egg. Answer: An egg that contains no embryo or germ, and one that will not hatch or incubate.

20. Is a fertile egg more nutritious than an infertile one? Answer: No, chemically they are the same.

21. Will an infertile egg keep longer than a fertile one when exposed to the same conditions? Answer: Yes.

22. Can you detect a fertile egg by candling? Answer: No, unless incubation has developed the embryo. The germ of the chick is microscopic.

23. What is the embryo? Answer: The developing germ or miniature chick.

24. Will fertile eggs incubate unless they are placed under a hen or in an incubator? Answer: Yes. They will incubate in the egg basket, in the hen's nest, in the weeds or strawstack, if exposed to a temperature of 70 to 103 degrees F.

25. After incubation has set in or the germ developed to a more or less extent, does the egg deteriorate? Answer: Yes, after the germ is chilled and dies decomposition rapidly follows.

26. Will hens lay more eggs if the roosters are allowed to run with them? Answer: No, experiments show that hens will lay more eggs if the roosters are not allowed to run with them.

27. How may eggs be preserved? Answer: There are various methods, the most common and practical being cold storage and sodium silicate, or water glass. They may also be preserved for some time by dipping in boiling water for a few seconds, or by applying grease to the shell of the egg.

28. Is it illegal to sell preserved eggs in the State of Ohio? Answer: It is illegal to sell them as and for fresh eggs. They must be sold as storage or pickled eggs. (South Dakota has no cold storage law and the food law does not define fresh eggs. This condition permits much misrepresentation in the sale of eggs by grocers.)

29. Do you advise the practice of preserving eggs? Answer: For home consumption only. The producer realizes more profit from his eggs when he sells them strictly fresh. Storage or pickled eggs always command a lower price than fresh eggs (where required to be honestly labeled). Another reason lies in the fact that efforts at egg preservation or pickling are oftentimes failures.

Pickled eggs are inferior in quality to either storage or fresh eggs, and their presence has a tendency to curtail the consumption of fresh eggs.

30. Is the cold storage egg an inferior article of food? Answer: No. Eggs placed in storage preserve their quality and storage has a tendency toward leveling the price throughout the year.

31. At what temperature is the room kept for cold-storage purposes? Answer: At a temperature of 29 to 30 degrees F.

32. Are eggs generally candled before placing in storage. Answer: Yes, also after taking out of storage.

33. If bacteria be present in eggs when placed in cold storage, will the growth of same be retarded? Answer: Yes, but activity commences again when the eggs are changed to a warmer temperature and decomposition rapidly follows.

34. Should eggs be placed in a warm room after being in cold storage? Answer: No; they will deteriorate rapidly. They should be placed in a good, clean refrigerator.

35. Can eggs that have been in storage for any length of time be detected by a candle? Answer: Yes, they are somewhat shrunken and generally the yolk is a trifle settled.

36. Should storage eggs be sold as and for fresh eggs? Answer: No. Such a sale would be a violation of the law.

37. Does it injure the contents of an egg to wash it? Answer: Yes; the exterior of an egg is a lodging place of bacteria spores of all kinds, and water drives them through the pores into the shell, causing the contents of the egg to rapidly decompose.

38. Why do dealers object to buying dirty eggs? Answer: First, because they deteriorate in a short time, and, second, when placed on the market, they do not have a very appetizing appearance.

39. How often should eggs be marketed? Answer: At least twice a week.

40. How often should they be gathered? Answer: Once a day in cool weather and at least twice a day during the rainy and hot weather.

41. Under what conditions should eggs be kept after gathering? Answer: In a cool, dry room or cellar.

42. Is a damp cellar a good place to keep eggs? Answer: No. Eggs kept in a damp cellar mold or sour quickly.

43. Do eggs absorb odors from onions, oils, vegetables, etc.? Answer: Yes; and they should not be placed near such things. Eggs absorb odors as readily as milk or butter.

44. Does the feed given to the poultry have any effect on the quality of the egg? Answer: Yes. They should be fed a balanced ration. It will not only improve the quality of the egg, but will have a tendency to increase the average production. You cannot expect to have a well-flavored egg when the hens get only bugs, grass and worms to eat.

45. What is a balanced ration? Answer: A balanced ration is one containing the right kind of nutriment in right proportion for the purpose for which it is fed.

46. What is a good ration for laying hens? Answer: Ten parts wheat, three parts oats, two parts bran and one part beef scrap, if fed with plenty of grit and green food, makes a very good ration for laying hens.

47. Will eggs of uniform size and color command a better price than eggs of various sizes and color? Answer: Yes. A great many produce dealers pay an advanced price for selected eggs. Never market small eggs. They do not sell readily on the market nor command the price of larger eggs.

48. Which commands the higher price—white or brown? Answer: In the New York market the white eggs commands the higher price and in Boston, the brown eggs.

49. Why is it the merchants and dealers generally pay the same price for eggs, regardless of the size and quality? Answer: It has been a long established custom that so long as the shell of the egg is intact "it is an egg," the size and quality of the contents not being taken into consideration. However, a great many merchants and dealers over the State pay an advanced price for large, clean fresh eggs.

50. Is it practical and advisable for the producer to market his eggs directly to the consumer? Why? Answer: Yes, because it tends to shorten the period of time from its production until it is consumed, thereby procuring the advantage of fresh, palatable and wholesome eggs to the consumer. Thus establishing a profit to the producer and a saving to the consumer.

51. Is there any great demand for infertile eggs. Answer: Many inquiries are sent to this department requesting the names of farmers and poultrymen who are producing infertile eggs. These inquiries come from commission merchants, grocers and co-operative associations from the larger cities.

52. Do infertile eggs of good size, clean and fresh, command a better price than fertile eggs? Answer: Yes.

53. What is meant by the case-count system of buying eggs? Answer: A system of buying simply on the basis of number, regardless of quality.

54. Is the case-count system a just method of buying eggs? Why? Answer: No. It is the greatest factor in preventing improvement in the quality of the commercial egg. It creates no incentive for the producer to give care and attention in producing a better egg, as all eggs, good, bad and indifferent, command the same price.

55. Are there other methods of buying eggs? Answer: The "loss-off" system and the graded or "quality basis."

56. What is meant by "loss-off"? Answer: Loss-off is a term used in egg buying where eggs are tested by candling before being accepted. The eggs unfit for food are not accepted and no pay is received for them.

57. What is meant by buying eggs by "grade" or on a "quality basis"? Answer: In buying eggs on a "quality basis" the eggs are graded as to size and quality, such as extras, firsts, seconds, small and dirty, etc., and each grade is paid for in accordance to quality.

58. Will the establishment of either the "loss-off" or "quality basis" have a tendency to improve the quality of the Ohio egg? Why? Answer: Yes, if the transaction or sale of eggs is on the "loss-off" basis the producer only receives pay for good, wholesome eggs. If the same be on a "quality basis" the better the quality the higher the price. The producer is rewarded for taking extra care of his product and it encourages improvement of quality.

59. Would either the "loss-off" or "quality basis" system have a tendency to raise the price of eggs to the consumer? Why? Answer: No. There would be more clean, large and wholesome eggs marketed. Even if it did raise the price 1 or 2 cents per dozen, most consumers would rather pay 30 cents and receive 12 good large eggs than to pay 25 cents for the same number and get five rotten ones and the remaining seven small and dirty.

60. Would the establishment of either of the above mentioned systems of buying and selling have a tendency to increase the consumption of eggs? Why. Answer: Yes. When the housewife buys a dozen eggs and a number of them are rotten, it does not have an appetizing effect, and the next time she goes to market, instead of buying eggs, she will buy some other article of food. Consumers do not like to pay out good, hard-earned money for rotten eggs. Good, wholesome eggs are a very nutritious article of food, and, at 30 cents per dozen, are cheaper than meat at the present high prices. Improve the quality and you will increase the demand.

61. If eggs were sold by weight, would it have a tendency to improve the quality. Answer: No. It might have a tendency to increase the size, but it would not check the sale of eggs unfit for food.

62. Will the importation of Chinese or other foreign eggs have a tendency to lower the price of fresh eggs. Answer: No. The importation of foreign eggs may lower the price of inferior grades of eggs on the market, but will not take the place of the large, clean, fresh eggs produced in this country.

63. What are the prime essentials for the production of good eggs. Answer: Pure bred poultry, good, clean feed, plenty of nests, and the production of infertile eggs (by keeping the roosters separated from the hens) during the summer months.—From the South Dakota Food and Dairy Department Bulletin.

EDUCATING CONSUMERS CONCERNING THE VALUE OF MILK.

The average consumer knows very little about the value of milk in the diet. This is not wholly his fault, because he usually has no opportunity or desire to study the question unless it is especially brought to his attention. The ignorance on the part of the household is one of the chief reasons for our low per capita consumption of milk. Did you know that the average person in the United States (adult or child) consumes only about one-half pint of milk daily? Think of it. Only about one glass a day for drinking and cooking. If consumers could be made to realize the advantages of milk it is safe to say that the consumption would be doubled.

Now, then, whose especial duty is it to take up this educational work? We feel that the milk dealer is in a peculiarly advantageous position for this. First, he is the one who is immediately interested in increasing the sale of milk, because it is to his advantage financially; and, second, he is in close personal contact with the consuming public; such contact is of immeasurable value in an advertising campaign.

We believe that milk dealers as a class do not advertise their product as it should be done. Don't be satisfied with telling your customers that your milk is the best in town. Tell them why pure milk is good for them and why they should use more of it. Let them know that milk is a food as well as a beverage, and contains all the food elements necessary for the growth and development of the body. Assure them that healthy adults as well as invalids and infants are benefited by milk. Explain that milk is a cheap food even at 10 cents a quart, when compared with most meats, eggs and other animal foods.—Milk Plant Letter.

AGAIN THE VITAMINES.

The United States Public Health Service has issued an instructive pamphlet by Carl Voegtlin, professor of Pharmacology, and his assistants, entitled "Bread as Food," which should be read by all persons interested in knowing the facts with regard to the effect on the nutritional value of wheat and corn ground by the modern roller process. Up to the year 1878 the old system of grinding cereals by crushing them between the mill stones was still in use. With the increased production of cereals, added to the limited number of men available as workers, came a change in the milling of wheat and corn. The roller system of grinding wheat and corn was invented, by means of which each separate grain was divided into its various parts, the germ, embryo, bran and endosperm. The last, yielding the starch cells, is used to make the fine white flour which has become so popular with consumers, who foolishly believe that it is a better flour because it is so white.

Dr. Voegtlin states that analyses made at the Bureau of Chemistry of the Department of Agriculture, show clearly that while the highly milled wheat and corn meal have better keeping qualities than the old fashioned products had, they contain less protein, fat and ash. They are also "often deficient in certain essentials accessory food substances, which are designated as vitamins. These substances are located in the intact kernel in the outer layers (aleurone layer) and probably also in the germ. As seen above the modern roller process eliminates to a great extent the bran and germ, and the resulting wheat flour, corn flour and grits (hominy) might be expected to be deficient in vitamins, an assumption which has been amply verified. "It may suffice here to state that it was found that, whereas the corn meal and wheat flour made by the old fashioned process, which is still in use to some extent in the south, contain practically all the vitamins of the whole grain, the highly milled products are considerably deficient in these substances."

Dr. Voegtlin describes the various experiments made to prove these statements. Fowls were used for experiments as they will live in perfect health for many months on an exclusive diet of wheat, corn, whole wheat flour, or so-called water ground corn-meal. If these animals are fed, however, on highly milled products they will die within a month or two of polyneuritis, a disease similar to beriberi. There seems to exist a perfect analogy between the well known relation of the polishing of rice to its nutritive value and the milling of wheat and corn to the nutritive value of wheat flour and corn meal. In the case of beriberi, numerous observations have demonstrated the fact that if the diet of people is largely made up of polished rice and is otherwise deficient in vitamins beriberi will make its appearance, whereas if under milled rice is substituted for the highly milled variety the disease is not so likely to break out.

The custom of using baking soda in the making of bread from corn meal, corn bread, is also discussed. In the South, especially, the method is followed of adding baking soda to the corn meal and water in preparing the "bread." "The high temperature in the oven liberates carbon dioxide from the baking soda and the latter is transformed into sodium carbonate, a strong alkali. The evolution causes the bread to rise." Voegtlin believes that the use of this baking soda without any acid leaves a bread deficient in certain essential accessory vitamins. The destruction of these vitamins is due to the action of the alkali on them. This method of using baking soda is not to be compared to the other method employed in baking corn bread from sour milk and soda, which is safe. A bread deficient in the vitamins does not yield perfect food value to the consumer, hence Voegtlin sees in this food one cause of pellagra, a deficiency disease.

Not only do housekeepers make a corn bread by the use of the baking soda but they also employ it in the cooking of beans and other foods in order to soften the food and insure its cooking in less time. Dr. Voegtlin states that while no experiments have yet been made to establish the truth of the theory he believes that the use of soda in beans has a destructive action on the vitamins.—The Osteopathic Magazine.

ADVERTISING AND THE DEALER'S COSTS.

Higher raw materials and narrowing margins of profits enforce the study of economy in every line of commercial activity. Labor saving machinery, the tests of the chemical laboratory, and the stopwatch of the efficiency engineer have enormously increased the production without adding to its cost, but there seems little doubt, that in the matter of conserving time and energy, the distributor has not kept pace with the manufacturer.

The cost of distribution is largely for labor. The big rewards in business go to the men who get the maximum result with the minimum of labor. The growth of a store which relies upon its sales force to educate each individual consumer will be slow, and it will be limited by the ability of the management to develop salesmanship in its clerks.

The man behind the counter should know the advertising which his firm is doing; also he ought to understand the trade-marked brands, nationally known, which are part of the stock he sells. Many people who have considered advertising only superficially think it limits the opportunity of the personal salesman; on the contrary, it increases them.

Every merchant is a warehouseman plus the ability to bring to his store people who will accept his estimate of the value of the goods there displayed. What people think about the articles they buy is the important thing. Modern business is a traffic in satisfaction, and goods are bought because the purchaser has been put, and maintained, in a favorable state of mind regarding them.

THE GENTLE COW.

The American cow gives 6,000,000,000 gallons of milk each year, according to the National Geographic Society. It sounds like a great deal to be used by even a nation of 102,000,000 people. We make great quantities of cheese and butter, exporting annually 728,000,000 pounds, less than half our total production.

Besides the milk and cream consumed on the farm our dairy products amount to $600,000,000 a year. That sum would go a long way toward maintaining an army and navy, even on the present European scale if we may venture to mention such matters in connection with so gentle and pacific a creature as the cow.

Other milk producing nations may worry about their milk supply, but we have no cause for alarm. Even if completely cut off from the rest of the world, as Germany is, the United States would have sufficient milk for all its needs.

But before we congratulate the cow on her achievements let us recognize the fact that mere quantity is not enough. For peace or war there is room for much improvement in the quality of the milk. Stables should be scrupulously clean; the milk that goes forth to nourish the nation should be rich and pure, free from dirt, tuberculosis and other disease germs. This is the kind of preparedness we want for the American cow.

VERY BEST MILK NONE TOO GOOD FOR THE BABIES.

By far the most important problem in growing a baby is the food problem. The very best food for a young baby is its mother's milk. The next best is cow's milk, which is also the chief article of food for all babies during a considerable period after weaning. The milk supply is therefore of great importance in relation to babies.

Many baby specialists prefer certified milk for baby feeding. This means milk from healthy cows, produced under the best conditions and handled in the most cleanly way by people who are healthy. This careful handling inevitably increases the cost of production and such milk must be sold at a higher price than ordinary milk.

If certified milk cannot be obtained on account of its cost or for other reasons, the next best milk for babies is properly pasteurized milk. Proper pasteurization means that the milk has been raised to a temperature of from 142 to 145 degrees F., and held at that temperature for a period of 20 to 30 minutes, then rapidly cooled to a temperature below 50 degrees F. Such a process destroys about 99 per cent. of all bacteria or germs in the milk and destroys all the disease germs.

As is well known, milk may contain the germs of tuberculosis, derived from the cow or from a consumptive who handles it, or the germs of diphtheria, scarlet fever and other diseases derived from a handler who is either diseased or a "carrier." These germs are all destroyed by proper pasteurization.

The effectiveness of pasteurization for this purpose is illustrated by a recent outbreak of typhoid fever at Richmond, California. The head milker on a dairy farm supplying 90 gallons of milk a day to Richmond had typhoid fever and infected the milk so that twelve cases of the disease developed among the consumers of this milk. The same dairy supplied 600 gallons of milk per day to the city of Berkeley and no cases of typhoid developed on the milk route in Berkeley. The Richmond supply was sold raw, while the Berkeley supply was pasteurized.

In addition to the disease germs in milk there are always germs which cause milk to sour and other germs which cause it to rot. On account of the toxic products resulting from their growth, the latter germs are probably the greatest menace to young babies who are fed on raw milk. As pasteurization destroys nearly all these germs, it offers a very great safeguard against their harmful effects. Unless certified milk can be secured, therefore, pasteurized milk should always be used when milk is required as a food for babies or young children.

The fact that milk has been pasteurized should not be an excuse for careless handling. Milk may be contaminated with disease germs after pasteurization if handled by a diseased person. If placed in dirty vessels or utensils as many or more germs may be added to the milk as were destroyed by pasteurization. If kept at a higher temperature than 50 degrees F., pasteurized milk will deteriorate almost, if not quite, as rapidly as raw milk.

In selecting milk for feeding babies the choice lies between two grades. Certified milk should be selected if it can be obtained; if not, pasteurized milk should be the second choice. In either case the milk must be carefully handled and kept cold after reaching the home in order that it may be in proper condition for feeding the baby.—New Jersey State Department of Health.

WHY CHILDREN SHOULD DRINK PLENTY MILK.

Harry Everett Barnard, Dairy and Food Commissioner of Indiana, and an authority on foods, says on the subject "Why Children Should Drink Plenty Milk:"

We have always known milk was the best food for children and grown-ups. We now know why it is the best food. Scientists who have been working away at our food problems have told us a lot about fats, carbohydrates and proteins, and they have arranged our diets for us so that we should get sufficient quantities of each of these ingredients. Now we know that we must not only have protein to build muscle and fat to feed the body and keep it warm, but we must have certain kinds of fats and proteins or we will not be well nourished. They have found that certain foods contain substances which they have called "growing bodies."

When "growing bodies" are present the children to whom they are fed grow. When they are not present the children will not grow. It is a significant fact that these substances which promote growth are not present in vegetable fats. Olive oil and cotton seed oil, and even lard, are not complete foods. Complete foods, the foods that contain the "growing bodies" are those intended by nature as food for the young. The yolk of the egg which furnishes nourishment for the chick before he steps out of his shell to hunt food for himself contains these bodies. The butter-fat of milk is especially rich in them.

We know now why little Mary came home from a visit in the country heavier and taller than when she went away; why her cheeks were rosier; why her eyes were brighter. Of course the fresh air on the farm was a tonic, but her better health and added weight were not only due to fresh air and exercise—she got a different food. The average child drinks much less milk than it should, and because butter is considered an expensive food, the bread is not spread as thickly with it as the child would like. Away from home Mary was urged to drink milk and as a guest she got all the bread and butter she wanted. That is why country life agreed with her, why she grew so rapidly.

The strongest argument for the use of plenty of milk and butter is this new fact—this discovery that growth depends upon a particular stimulating substance which is not found in most foods, but which is present in the butterfat. Pasteurization does not destroy this vital principle. Butter heated for two hours is still full of "growing bodies." Skimmed milk is not a complete food. The butterfat the child needs has been taken away. When skimmed milk is used for drinking, and it ought to be used more than it is, plenty of butter should be added to the diet. Bread and butter and a glass of milk is a diet for the growing child or adult. It contains everything the body needs to nourish it. Our old ideas of nutrition are wrong. The food faddists who have told us not to eat meat, not to eat cooked food, not to use white flour or polished rice, who have urged us to take our potatoes with the skins on, to drink distilled water because it contains no minerals, and not to drink it for the same reason may have hit some truths by accident, but if half of what we are now learning of our food is right, we have been following false and dangerous gods, accepting half truths for whole ones and messing up Nature's great plan by trying to improve it.

What we have thought perfect foods are not alone capable of promoting growth. Animal fats are far more valuable than vegetable fats and oils, and of all foods milk, both in its protein and fat content, satisfies best the needs of the growing child. And this is also true. While growth may be checked at will by feeding fats deficient in "growing bodies" it may be promoted or accelerated by changing the diet. Put plenty of milk and butter into the diet and the stunted child attains a normal stature.

VALUE OF DAIRY COWS.

According to the estimates made by more than 1,800 dairymen and breeders the dairy cow reaches her highest value when between five and six years of age. These estimates have been used as a basis of a study on the influence of age on the value of dairy cows recently published as Department Bulletin No. 413. The figures were obtained from well informed farmers throughout the principal dairy districts of the country and the average may be taken as fairly representative of relative value of cows at different ages.

Estimates were obtained for four of the leading dairy herds—Holstein, Guernsey, Jersey and Ayrshire—and for four classes of three-year olds of each breed, namely, the $80 grade cow, the $100 grade, the $200 pure bred and the $300 pure bred. Working from this series of arbitrary values, estimates covering values from birth to fourteen years of age were obtained.

For example, it was found that the farmers estimated that a grade Holstein worth $80 at three years of age, was worth $10 at birth, $101 at six years of age and $46 at fourteen. In the case of pure breds the estimated advance in value up to five or six years of age is relatively sharper and the decline thereafter correspondingly abrupt. Thus the $300 pure bred Jersey is estimated to be worth $59 at birth, $351 at six years, and but $74 at fourteen.

IMPROVING FARM BUTTER.

The adoption of more careful methods of handling milk and cream and improved practices in the making of farm butter will reduce rather than increase the trouble incident to home production of this food, say dairy specialists, of the United States Department of Agriculture, and will result in a superior product which can be sold more easily and for a better price than the average farm butter. Last year about 30,000,000 pounds of butter, much of which originated on the farm, was washed or renovated because it was of such poor quality that it could not be profitably offered on the regular butter markets.

Cream alone should be churned. It may be skimmed as soon as it rises or may be separated by a mechanical separator. The latter plan is the more efficient, and though requiring a considerable initial outlay, often will be profitable. The cream should be set aside in a clean place by separate milkings. A temperature of 50 degrees F. or lower should be maintained until from 12 to 18 hours before churning time when the various batches should be stirred together well and brought to a temperature of about 70 degrees F. by placing the container in a bucket of warm water. One of the first acts of the farm housewife who decides to adopt improved methods should be the purchase of a dairy thermometer. Temperatures play an important part in the development of flavors in butter, and always should be determined with fair accuracy. After the cream is mixed it should be kept at approximately 70 degrees F. until just before churning time, when it should be reduced to about 58 degrees F., where this is possible.

The barrel type has been found by dairy specialists to be one of the most satisfactory churns. The dasher or plunger type requires a somewhat greater expenditure of labor. Earthenware churns are especially undesirable unless perfectly glazed, since if pores are exposed they absorb milk and cream which later decay. Churns with mechanical devices inside them are difficult to clean and sometimes injure the butter.

The churn should be scalded preparatory to churning, but should be cooled with water before the cream is placed inside. The cream should be poured in through a coarse strainer. Every few minutes during the early part of the churning gas should be allowed to escape from the churn. If the temperature is right the churning should require about twenty-five or thirty minutes. The process is completed when the granules are about the size of large wheat kernels. The buttermilk should then be drained off and the butter granules repeatedly washed with cold water while still in the churn. The washing should be continued until all milk is removed. Under no circumstances should working be depended upon to remove surplus milk.

When the butter is free from all milk it should be taken from the churn with a paddle and placed on a worker. The hands should never touch the butter, both on account of sanitary reasons and because the body warmth may melt the fat. The working should be done carefully to avoid making the butter greasy. Before the butter is worked fine salt should be added at the rate of about an ounce per pound of fat.

MILK AND DISEASE.

Tuberculosis, septic sore throat and intestinal troubles in children may be transmitted through infected milk. Of the diseases that may be transmitted through the medium of milk typhoid fever is the most important. Diphtheria and scarlet fever may also be transmitted through infected milk. Certain bacteria that gain entrance to milk during and after the milking process may cause intestinal troubles in children.

Some authorities estimate that about 7 per cent. of the tuberculosis in man has been transmitted from tuberculous cows. Adults run small risk of becoming infected from drinking milk, but children, especially those under five years of age, are quite liable to become infected from drinking milk or cream containing the germs of bovine tuberculosis. Tuberculosis germs are sometimes found in butter and cheese, though infection from these foods is likely of very rare occurrence. Contrary to the belief held by some people tuberculosis germs do not increase in numbers while in milk.

The per cent. of tubercular milk cows varies greatly in different sections of the country. More tubercular cows are found in the older dairying sections than in those sections where dairying is not intensively carried on. Probably less than ten per cent. of the milk cows throughout the country have tuberculosis. Of this number about one out of every hundred has tuberculosis of the udder. Only when the udder is diseased will the milk be infected. The germs of tuberculosis may, and often do, gain entrance through infected filth that is allowed to fall in milk.

Sore throat and intestinal troubles, especially in the case of children, may result from drinking milk that comes from cows with inflamed udders.

While water is responsible for much of our typhoid fever, epidemics of that disease have been traced to milk. The germs of typhoid gain entrance to milk in various ways. Rinsing utensils in water containing the germs of typhoid was responsible for an epidemic in Connecticut where 386 cases developed. Flies may infect milk with typhoid germs. Scarlet fever and diphtheria may be caused by milk, but instances of these diseases being so transmitted are not very frequent. Diphtheria germs can live and multiply in milk, as can also the germs of typhoid fever.

Children, especially those who must use cow's milk for much or all of their food, are the greatest sufferers from impure milk. They are more susceptible to disease than are grown persons. It is quite likely that much of the so-called summer complaint of children is caused by the use of milk that has not been produced under sanitary conditions. It has been noticed that an improvement in the quality of the milk in large cities has been followed by a decrease in the death rate of children.

Considering the fact that millions of gallons of milk are consumed each month, it must be admitted that the danger of adults contracting typhoid or some other disease from infected milk is remote. The fact, however, that such a possibility exists makes it imperative that all reasonable precautions be taken to insure a safe milk supply. If any doubt exists as to the safety of milk that is used in the home, the milk should be pasteurized.—J. M. Fuller, Department of Dairying, Oklahoma A. and M. College.

NEW FACTS REGARDING BUTTERFAT FOR FOOD.

The following article by J. H. Frandsen, Professor of Dairy Husbandry, University of Nebraska, appeared in a recent issue of the Dairy Record:

There has been an idea prevalent among dietists and chemists, as well as people in general, that all fats, regardless of their source, yielded only energy and heat when consumed by the animal or human body, and until very recently no dietetic or chemical experiment had shown any real important difference between butterfat and other fats. It had, of course, been proved that fats of low melting point were more digestible than those of a high melting point. Aside from this there was thought to be but little difference in their food value. In the estimation of many "fat was fat" and yielded only energy and heat.

The oleomargarine people often took advantage of this fact to exploit a cheap product as a substitute for butter. Whether or not this "just as good or better product" is at all worthy of the place they claim for it has always been seriously questioned by dairy and creamery men. In this connection experiments carried on by F. B. Osborn, of the Connecticut Experiment Station, Dr. Mendel, of Yale, and E. V. McCollum, of the Wisconsin Experiment Station, are peculiarly interesting and prove beyond a doubt the real value of butter, viz., that butterfat not only yields energy and heat, as do other fats, but that it contains something more vital than other fats—a principle which, like proteids, supplies the elements necessary for growth and life itself.

In experiments carried on with white rats, young rats were fed mixtures composed of chemically pure protein, starch, fat, sugar, and various salts, and got along splendidly for the first three months, when they lost appetite, fell off in growth, and finally starved. After numerous repetitions of this nature the investigators found that when milk was added to the ration the little animals began to regain normal condition, to thrive and grow to maturity. Many changes were made in their diet to make it more palatable, changes in salts used, the kinds and amounts of sugar, etc., but always the same result—growth ceased at the age of about four months. It was in an attempt to increase the palatability of the diet by substituting pure butterfat for the lard, which had been used as the fat in the ration, that the investigators found these new facts, for the little animals immediately began to grow just as when milk was fed. It was evident that butterfat supplies something necessary for growth which lard could not supply. Other experiments were carried on to determine whether other fats from the animal or vegetable kingdom would produce the same effect as had butterfat. Experiments with tallow, olive oil, corn oil, cottonseed oil and peanut oil proved futile, while the fat of eggs and fat extracts from the cells of pigs' kidneys produced the same results as did butterfat. Thus it seems evident that the fats obtained from the living protoplasm of the animal have this property of inducing growth after growth has ceased. Thus far no plant fat has been found to possess this power.

Experiments with pigs and calves gave similar results to those obtained with the rats. If records of experiments on man were available, it is reasonable to suppose that results fully as striking would be obtained. In this connection the editor of Hoard's Dairyman recalls two instances in which two public institutions, had in the interest of economy, substituted oleomargarine for butter in the diet of the inmates. It was noticed that when oleo was used the inmates were not in as good physical condition and that physicians were in greater demand than before. When oleo was replaced by butter it was reported that the health of the inmates was materially improved.

In the light of these experiments and observations it is reasonable to suppose that even more marked discrepancies would be apparent in the growth and general health of young children.

Just how much or how little butterfat can be used and still maintain growth has not yet been determined, but enough has been proved to give the dairyman sure footing in his claim that butterfat is a better food than butter substitutes composed of vegetable fats and oils. Facts and figures like these make it most embarrassing for the oleo manufacturer to claim hereafter that he has "just as good as butter" article, and surely it behooves the housewife to give the most careful consideration to the results of these recent investigations and the conclusions which may logically be drawn from them, before she decides to eliminate butter from the diet of her family.

A SEASON OF TRADE SENSATIONS.

The exciting developments in the grocery trade are at least novel, if not bewildering, and the temptation for abnormal speculation is only held at bay by a lack of confidence in the purported disturbing influences. Values have advanced with a speed and firmness which would indicate truly economic adjustments alleged to be due to abnormal exports, foreign embargoes, short crops and most eccentric labor conditions, and these are materially augmented by cheap money. How long the conditions favorable to speculation and commodity control shall continue, no one can foretell. But if statistics are reliable nothing but next year's crops can make any material change in the food markets. A lessened consumption of some of the products may tend to limit further advances in price; a limited embargo on exports would seem to be justifiable and serve our people to a good purpose. On the other hand, if the conditions which have given rise to these exciting developments continue to prevail, the spring months will find us facing problems which nations only in the grip of war or famine have ever been called upon to serve.

In any other line of business comparative conditions would mean prosperity and business activity. The retail grocery business, however, is not duly susceptible to market changes.

The retail grocer to share in the advantages which the markets are according, will of necessity require the fullest trade intelligence and a resourceful judgment.

SIGNIFICANCE OF THE BACTERIOLOGICAL ANALYSIS OF MILK.

At the convention of the International Association of Dairy and Milk Inspectors Prof. H. W. Conn, of the Connecticut State Board of Health, read an interesting paper on "The Reliability and Significance of the Bacteriological Analysis of Milk." He said in part:

If we admit that for all practical purposes bacteriological analyses of milk are reliable enough to accurately classify a series of samples of milk, the wider question remains as to what is the significance of such analysis after we have obtained it. This is an extremely broad subject. * * * Milk is one of the best of foods, and one of the cheapest but at the same time the most easily spoiled and the most dangerous. * * * The ease with which milk is spoiled is known by every housewife who has anything to do with the handling of milk, as well as by all dairymen.

The sources of bacteria present in milk may be roughly classified as three. Dirt, disease or inflamed udders and multiplication. It is true that a small number of bacteria get into the milk in its passage from the milk glands to the exterior through the milk ducts, but these are very few in number, if the cow's udder is a healthy one. * * * If, however, the udders are diseased, or if there are inflamed areas in the udder, due to any of a large number of causes, the numbers of bacteria that may get into the milk from this source may increase until they are so numerous as to count many thousand per cubic centimeter in the milk even when directly drawn from the udders, without any external contamination. * * * Apart from diseased udders, however, the great source of milk bacteria is to be regarded as filth of all kinds. Under this head are included not only manure and other forms of filth that get into the milk during the milking but old, partially decomposed milk, which is not infrequently left in the milk pails and milk cans even after an ordinary washing. We have learned in recent years that this is the largest source of the external contamination of milk with bacteria, and that a large part of the excessively high counts are due to some form of filth or dirt in the milking utensils. A third source * * * under the head of multiplication, means simply that whatever bacteria may get into the milk at the time of milking or immediately afterward, find milk an excellent medium for their growth, feed and multiply rapidly, and at warm temperatures in the course of a very few hours may become prodigiously numerous. From this it follows that milk which was originally produced in cleanly condition may after a number of hours contain enormous numbers of bacteria. While there are other factors that control the number of bacteria present in milk * * * the primary ones are those indicated, diseased udders, filth and multiplication.

The bacteria present in milk may be the cause of much mischief. In the first place, by their growth, they inevitably cause the decomposition of the milk. * * * The bacteria present in milk may cause various types of illness. Aside from those produced by direct poisoning * * * the agency of milk in distributing the specific germs of various diseases is too well known today to require further mention. * * * Speaking in general we may state that the larger the number of bacteria in milk the greater is the indication that the milk has undergone decomposition since the time it was drawn from the cow.

In purchasing milk for consumption as food the public has a right to demand three things. First, that the milk should not be unsafe; second, that it should not be dirty; third, that it should not be stale. * * *

Clean, fresh milk from healthy cows will contain few bacteria. This proposition lies at the basis of all our conceptions as to the significance of bacteria in milk. It is true that small numbers of bacteria will get into the milk during milking, even from healthy cows, kept in good condition. But this number will be extremely small, and if such milk is produced under cleanly conditions and placed in clean milking utensils the number of bacteria will usually be below 5,000 per cubic centimeter. * * * A good milker, who understands the sources and nature of bacteria, will have practically no difficulty in getting milk with a bacterial content of less than 10,000 in practically any dairy which is kept in cleanly condition.

From all this it follows that the bacteria content of market milk is a measure of its cleanliness, freshness and safety, or in general, of its wholesomeness. Stated in other terms, we may say that the milk with a high bacterial count is either dirty, or from diseased udders, or is stale. * * * Such milk must be either called unclean or stale.

The number of bacteria present in milk must not alone be taken as a measure of its safety. Even though the number in any sample of milk might be extremely low it may chance to contain specific disease germs and be unsafe, and on the other hand, a sample of milk may have bacteria in enormous numbers and still be wholesome because the species of bacteria are in no way injurious. It is for this reason that the so-called buttermilk that contains bacteria frequently in hundreds of millions per cubic centimeter is a perfectly wholesome drink, for though the bacteria are very numerous they are of a harmless and even healthful type. Therefore such milk is perfectly wholesome. * * * So here, high numbers of bacteria are not necessarily dangerous, but they are an indication of carelessness and therefore a sign of warning. * * *

A bacterial examination of milk * * * furnishes a satisfactory basis for the grading of milk, and thus dignifies the milk industry. The milk industry has suffered more than those connected with it realize by the fact that in general milk is sold under one price, with no distinction as to grade. * * * In no other industry can it be said that the poorer grades bring the same price in the market as the higher grades. Under these conditions there is no stimulus to produce a higher grade of milk. * * * If it were possible for milk to be sold according to its quality, there would be a very decided improvement in the conditions of things in the milk industry everywhere. * * * When the time comes that I can go into market and buy a bottle of milk with a certain label on it that guarantees me that the milk has been produced in a cleanly, safe condition I shall be willing to pay an extra price for such milk, and this extra price will have its effect all along the line from the purchaser to the producer in the country. Producer, dealer and consumer will be all equally benefited. * * *

A bacterial analysis of milk cannot be relied upon to give actual numbers of bacteria, but only approximate numbers. Variations of some considerable moment are sure to be found, even with the best laboratory technique. But these variations are of no significance when they come to be applied to the problem in hand. Considering the wide range of bacterial content in milk the bacteriological analyses as made in the routine laboratories are reliable enough to divide the milk accurately into proper grades, so accurately that different laboratories would not differ in the grade in which they would place their different samples. Bacterial analysis offers the only means of grading milk according to its sanitary character. A grading system applied to the milk industry is the great desideratum for the improvement of the industry in the future from the standpoint of the producer, the dealer and the consumer.

AN EMBARGO ON FOOD.

Numbers of grocers' associations are passing resolutions asking that the President place an embargo on food, the point being that the high prices of flour, wheat and various other commodities is largely the result of exports to foreign countries.

The present high prices of many foods is a great hardship on the poor and also on the grocers, for grocers are rarely, if ever, able to make a respectable percentage of profit when the market rules are high.

The statement has been made that the President has no authority to declare an embargo on food. This is not the case, however, although it is not likely that the President would declare an embargo were he so disposed, without the authority of Congress, as an embargo declared independent of Congressional action would be regarded as an arbitrary act in restraint of trade, and also as an unneutral act.

The Constitution of the United States especially provides that Congress shall have the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and were the President disposed to place an embargo on exports of wheat, flour or other foods his position would be to take the matter up with Congress and have that body authorize him to declare such an embargo.—Grocers' Magazine.

GRADING MILK.

View the milk question from any angle and it will be found that grading is the most important factor to consider in solving the market milk problem. We recognize the perplexities which confront both the producers and the distributors of milk, and that there are other important factors to consider besides paying for milk according to grade. But we cannot see any possible way to secure justice to the producer and consumer until milk is purchased and sold according to its food value. A few milk dealers have made some difference in price between high and low grade milk, but the spread in price has been altogether too small. The farmer has known this and he, in too many instances, has governed himself accordingly.

In grading milk it is not enough to consider its fat content, but we must recognize the conditions under which it is produced, its care from the time it is drawn from the cow to delivery, and its final quality as delivered. The farmer who takes pains to produce a high grade product, who takes pride in his work and recognizes the rights of the consumer,—that farmer must receive a greater compensation for his product than the shiftless and does-not-care dairyman. State inspectors, boards of health and milk dealers, have been urging and demanding, and rightfully, too, that the farmer shall produce better milk, but nearly all have failed to recognize, in sufficient or stimulating compensation, those who have been willing to produce a high grade of milk. There is a greater difference in good and poor milk than ten cents a hundred.

The consumer must not only be taught the food value of milk, but also the difference in value between high and low grade milk. He is, in most cases, wholly oblivious to the many grades of milk and their relative cost of production. We would not permit the sale of unwholesome milk, no matter how low its price; but we do know that before the milk question is settled right the farmer must be paid for milk according to its grade, and that the consumer must pay for milk according to its grade. The grading of milk is, without question, the first and most important factor to adjust in solving the present milk situation.—Hoard's Dairymen.

BY-PRODUCTS FROM CITRUS FRUITS.

The following extract regarding some of the work done in the interest of the citrus fruit producers is taken from the annual report of the Bureau of Chemistry, United States Department of Agriculture:

The development of a method for the manufacture of citrate of lime from lemons has been completed, while the development of a method for the manufacture of citric acid free from contamination by heavy metals is well advanced. The manufacture of lemon oil has been further studied and the determination of the seasonal variations of the oil and citric acid content of lemons has been practically completed for certain sections of California. A study of tangerines has shown that the green fruit has value as a source of citric acid and that the oil has commercial possibilities. The manufacture of marmalade stock has been undertaken.

A fine orange vinegar has been manufactured on a small commercial scale which promises to find a market, though a limited one, because it costs more to produce than the usual product. The determination of the composition of California oranges with reference to season, climate, soil, location, and methods of cultivation has been completed and the results are being prepared for publication. The study of the composition of oranges from selected trees has been of great assistance to the Bureau of Plant Industry in studying bud variations for the purpose of making selections in propagation experiments. Similar studies upon grape fruit have been begun with the Bureau of Plant Industry for the purpose of standardizing and improving the varieties grown. A study to establish the range of variation in composition of mature Florida and California grape fruit has been undertaken to be carried through several seasons.

FEDERAL FOOD AND DRUGS AND OTHER ACTS VIGOROUSLY ENFORCED.

The following summary, showing the activities of the United States Department of Agriculture during the last fiscal year in enforcing the Food and Drugs Act and other regulatory statutes administered by the Department, is taken from the annual report of the Solicitor of that Department.

In the enforcement of these various laws the courts were invoked in 2,623 violations, and a total of $116,430.58 was recovered in fines and damages. This is exclusive of condemnations and forfeitures in 553 cases under the Food and Drugs and Insecticide Acts.

The Food and Drugs Act.

Nine hundred and seventy-eight cases under the Food and Drugs Act were transmitted to the Department of Justice, in 401 of which criminal proceedings and in 577 of which seizures were recommended. The 401 criminal cases embraced 787 alleged violations of the Food and Drugs Act.

At the close of the fiscal year 1915, 435 cases were pending, of which 233 were criminal prosecutions and 202 were seizures.

Three hundred and seventy-two cases pending at the close of the fiscal year 1915, and 664 reported during the fiscal year 1916, in all 1,036, were terminated in 1916. Of those terminated 434 were criminal and 602 were civil. In 330 of the 434 criminal cases fines amounting to $15,905.56 were imposed.

In 132 of these cases fines amounted to $50 or higher, in 48 cases fines amounted to $100 or more in each case, and in 19 cases to $200 or more in each. The highest fine imposed on a single defendant was $600. In addition to the fines imposed costs generally were assessed. Of the 602 civil cases terminated during the year decrees of condemnation and forfeiture were entered in 543. In the 543 cases in which decrees of condemnation and forfeiture were entered the goods were destroyed in 330, released on bond or otherwise in 177, sold in 35, ordered sold or destroyed in 1.

At the close of the year 377 cases were pending, of which 200 were criminal prosecutions and 177 were seizures.

Meat Inspection Law.

Two hundred and thirty-seven under the Meat Inspection Law were reported to the Attorney-General. At the close of the fiscal year 1915, 65 cases were pending. Of the cases reported during the fiscal year in 1916, 168, and of those pending at the close of the fiscal year 1915, 42, in all 210, were terminated during 1916. One hundred and eighty-eight resulted in convictions.

Sentence of imprisonment, amounting to 30 days, was imposed in one case; in another, the defendant was committed to jail pending payment of his fine; while in 4 other cases, consolidated into one, sentence was suspended upon payment of costs by defendant.

Fines aggregating $3,250 were imposed in 133 cases. In 25 cases, fines ranged from $50 to $200.

Twenty-eight Hour and Animal Quarantine Laws.

In administering the 28-hour law, which prohibits the confinement of live stock in cars without unloading them for proper periods of rest and feeding, penalties aggregating $52,450 were recovered in 383 cases during the fiscal year 1916. In enforcing the acts regulating the interstate movement of quarantined or diseased live stock, fines aggregating $11,680 were imposed in 102 cases.

The Virus Act.

Thirty-eight apparent violations of the act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 832), governing the preparation, shipment, and importation of viruses serums, toxins, and analogous products, intended for use in the treatment of domestic animals, were reported to the Attorney General. Fines aggregating $185 were imposed in 36 cases.

Insecticide Act.

In the enforcement of the insecticide act, which is designed to prevent interstate and foreign commerce in misbranded and adulterated insecticides and fungicides, 87 cases were reported to the Attorney General, in 76 of which criminal proceedings and in 11 seizures were recommended. Fines aggregating $2,040 were collected in 80 cases decided in favor of the Government. Decrees of condemnation and forfeiture were entered in 10 of the civil cases.

The Lacey Act.

Under the Lacey Act, which regulates the interstate shipment of game, 51 cases were reported to the Department of Justice. Of these 19 were closed, 15 by convictions and imposition of fines, and one by a jail sentence. Fines amounting to $906 were collected in the 31 cases terminated during the year.

Statutes Relating to the National Forests.

In administering the laws relating to the National Forests the Government recovered $29,154 on account of trespass and collected fines to the amount of $425.

In addition to the cases involving money penalties, the Department of Agriculture handled 590 cases involving about 200,000 acres of land in National Forests claimed under the homestead, timber and stone, mineral, railroad, and other land laws. As a result of the 130 decisions for the Government, approximately 108,409 acres of land, supporting a stand of more than 240,000,000 feet of timber, valued at more than $400,000, were retained in the National Forests.

THE NATIONAL GRANGE ISSUES A PROCLAMATION.

There has been considerable agitation in the newspapers and magazines throughout the country in regard to the high cost of living and many untrue and unjustifiable statements have been made with reference to the responsibility of the farmer in regard to the matter.

Therefore, in order that the consuming public may have some facts pertaining thereto, your committee submits the following statement:

In many countries with cheap labor and high-priced lands the yield per acre exceeds that of the United States. The American farmer with cheap lands and high-priced labor produces many times as much per man as does the farmer of any country in the world.

The high price of farm products is due to several causes. Some of the more important ones are: The climatic conditions of this country during the past year were perhaps one of the leading causes of crop shortage. A long, cold, wet spring, followed by very hot, dry weather, extending over a larger area of country than is usually the case, reduced acreage and yield to a more marked degree than has been the case for any previous year. For example the wheat in the Northwest was a crop failure; the corn crop was in many sections a partial failure, as well as the potato and vegetable crops.

It must be borne in mind that the high prices have struck the farmer in whatever he buys, as much as it has the city consumer. Farm labor is scarcer and higher than ever before in this country. Everything the farmer buys, whether machinery, fertilizer, fencing, clothing, or the necessities of life, have increased in price by leaps and bounds. This is also true of taxation, the increase being in many sections 50 per cent. or more, during the last five years.

In former days everything the farmer needed was produced on his farm or in his immediate neighborhood. This is all changed and the farmer of to-day is the largest consumer of manufactured products, even in too many cases, buying his meats and flour.

Our city cousins have changed their methods of living quite as much as we have. Instead of buying in quantities as formerly, they live in cramped quarters with a kitchenette 6x8 and buy in very small quantities, or live out of cartons and cans and in many cases with little regard to Home Economics. With this can be coupled expensive methods of distribution, which is not the fault of the farmer.

The fact that nearly one-half of the civilized world has left the field of production and entered upon the work of destruction has increased the demand for all kinds of products and goods. We believe that prices will be high for several years, especially for manufactured goods. As to the products of the farm, the fixing of prices is mainly by the law of supply and demand in the markets of the world. The farmer competes with the cheapest paid labor on earth. When he sells some of his products, as he did only a few years ago, at less than cost, he gets no redress, no reduction in taxes nor in anything he buys, and it would be very unfair that when he is getting a fair price for some of his products to place an embargo on what he produces to lower the price and ultimately reduce the supply. So that an embargo on wheat and other cereals would in the long run mean decreased acreage. But if embargoes are to be placed to help the situation, it should be on manufactured goods, particularly munitions of war. This would give the farmers more laborers and reduce the prices of what he buys.

We believe that in some instances production has been restricted by trusts and monopolies. This is particularly true of the meat situation, as many of the villages, towns and cities in many sections are not permitted to kill their own meats because of the unfair competition from the packing interests. We further believe that while the crops have been short, yet there is plenty for all in this country and some to sell. But at the same time economy should be practiced along all lines. The high price of potatoes and vegetables this year does not mean that the same price will prevail next year. By taking a ten-year average the producer is not getting a living price, and under present conditions we are only getting a fair price. That at present prices some articles, such as milk, taking into account its food value, is still cheap.

Other causes might be enumerated thus:

The alarming increase of insect and fungus pests.

Gambling in food products, which should be prohibited.

There should be more storage houses in the country and under the control of the farmers themselves.

The duplication in service in the village, town and city, also the lack of marketing facilities in some towns and cities.

The American farmer is farming as well as he can afford. He will increase the yields as he gets pay for increased production. Increased production means increased cost, and unless prices warrant this increase the farmer cannot go ahead. With the high prices now prevailing many farmers are getting no returns for their labor. With the increased development of scientific knowledge turned over to the farmer through agricultural colleges, experiment stations and particularly the work done by the National Department of Agriculture with other agencies, we can assure the American consumer that the American farmer, if given a fair chance and a square deal, will not only continue to feed America, but will have some to spare.

THE NATIONAL DAIRY UNION.

The National Dairy Union met with the National Creamery Buttermakers' Association at Minneapolis, on November 14, 15 and 16, 1916. The evening session of the 15th was turned over to the National Dairy Union. Mr. N. P. Hull, President, presided, and delivered an interesting address. The Secretary read a report of the legislative work of the National Dairy Union, and S. B. Shilling, the Treasurer, read the financial statement. The Directors elected were: N. P. Hull, Lansing, Mich., H. J. Credicott, Freeport, Ill., S. B. Shilling, Chicago, Ill., J. R. Morley, Owatonna, Minn. and H. S. Johnson, of the Fox River Butter Co., Chicago, Ill. After the meeting an organization was effected by re-electing N. P. Hull, President, H. J. Credicott, Vice-President, S. B. Shilling, Treasurer, and Wm. T. Creasy was re-appointed Secretary.

The Secretary called attention to the method of measuring color in the New Haugen Bill, which was introduced in Congress March 28, 1916, and to the Resolutions passed at the Dairy Conference held in Washington, May 5 and 6, 1916.

Particular attention was paid to two Resolutions: One demanding a division of the Bureau of Animal Industry, and the other for national aid in the eradication of tuberculosis in cattle.

* * * * *

The National Creamery Buttermakers' Association had a very successful meeting, and among other Resolutions passed the following:

Reaffirmed its stand on pasteurization of dairy products and by-products.

That the Association should have a voice in settling Federal butter standards, and to this end recommended that a Committee be appointed to co-operate with the Federal government, in order to decide upon butter standards which can be supported and advocated by the Association.

The Association recommended to the various States of this country the passage of pasteurization laws by the various State legislatures.

The Association resented and condemned efforts to discredit and undermine the dairy industry by certain propogandists, by misrepresentations and distorted facts.

That the Association renew its pledges of co-operation with the National Dairy Union.

The Association approved the activities of the President and Secretary in presenting arguments against the icing and freight charges case before the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Association approved the efforts of Judge Quarton, of Iowa, in his fight before the Interstate Commerce Commission against car load rates for distant markets. (At present the rates are the same per hundred pounds of dairy products, whether in car load lots or less).

John J. Farrell was re-elected President, and Martin H. Meyer was re-elected Secretary.

The exhibits of butter were larger than for many years, the highest score being 97.50, which was captured by a buttermaker in Minnesota. The Convention was opposed to National inspection of creameries, believing that the work could be done more thoroughly by the States. There was a large attendance and the program was instructive.

* * * * *

The National Grange at its 50th Annual Session held in Washington, D. C., November 15-24, 1916, passed Resolutions endorsing the Haugen Oleomargarine Bill, asking for a division of the Bureau of Animal Industry, putting it under three heads, instead of one as at present (one relating to livestock and one to dairy cattle and the dairy industry, and the third to have charge of animal health, these three heads to form a Federal Live Stock Board).

The Grange also passed Resolutions for National aid in the eradication of tuberculosis in cattle, and endorsed the Borland Resolution to investigate the Beef Trust.

Released on receipt. From the office of Wm. T. Creasy, Secretary, The National Dairy Union, Catawissa, Pa., November 28, 1916.

A VALUABLE DISCOVERY.

Poor soils always lack phosphorus, and better soils usually respond to some application of this mineral which is generally in small supply. Phosphatic rock is the chief source from which this material is obtained, and the cost is largely increased by the treatment of the rock with sulphuric acid to make the plant food available. Director Lippman, of the New Jersey Experiment Station, has recently discovered that sulphur may be used in place of sulphuric acid and the treatment can be given under ordinary farm conditions, thus cutting down the cost. He has found that when rock phosphate and sulphur are mixed and added to a compost heap, a sufficient amount of sulphuric acid is produced to affect the rock precisely as it is affected in the factory by the addition of sulphuric acid. Ninety per cent. of the plant food in the rock has become available in some of the tests made. Two advantages attach to this method of making the needed phosphorus available. There is a cash saving in buying the floats and sulphur and having the plant food made available in the farm compost heap, and there is a distinct gain in the addition to the soil of the bacteria that abound in compost supplied with sulphur and phosphorus. If a worn soil were given plenty of the right bacteria and material on which they thrive, it would cease being a poor soil. There is saving and gain in the process, if field tests support the ones repeatedly made in the New Jersey station laboratory, and on this point Dr. Lippman feels entirely sure.—National Stockman and Farmer.

RICH CREAM.

When cream is sold from the farm, says Hoard's Dairyman, there seems to be a tendency to skim a rather thin cream, even though it is bought by test, and the farmer is paid for the pounds of butterfat it contains, rather than for the pounds of cream only. The prevailing opinion among farmers seems to be that the more cream they sell, the more money they will receive. It is therefore sometimes difficult to convince them that a rich cream is more profitable than a thin cream. Skimming a rich cream is beneficial to the farmer because:

1. He keeps more skimmilk on the farm. Suppose he sells 100 pounds of butterfat in cream, testing 20 per cent. fat, and receives 30 cents a pound fat for it. His check will be $30 and he will need six ten-gallon cans to ship the 500 pounds of cream. The 500 pounds of thin cream will contain about 400 pounds of skimmilk, which is worth to him at least $1. If, on the other hand, he sold the same 100 pounds of butterfat as cream testing 40 per cent. fat he would then receive $30, the same price as for the 20 per cent cream, but he would need only three 10-gallon cans for shipping it, and he would send from the farm only 150 pounds of skimmilk, worth about 37 cents.

2. He has less cream to cool, in the case mentioned, 150 instead of 400 pounds of cream.

3. Less labor and fewer utensils are required to handle rich than thin cream.

4. The transportation or hauling charges are less. The rich cream helps the buttermaker and the creamery by making it possible to obtain a better quality of butter and better prices than from thin cream.

Some of the benefits of a rich cream to the creamery are:

1. Smaller vats and ripeners are needed.
2. There are savings of fuel for heating and of ice for cooling cream.
3. There is less loss in the buttermilk from churning rich cream.
4. More starter can be used in ripening the cream and a better flavor obtained in the butter.

5. The pasteurization of the cream can be made more satisfactory.

HIGH COST OF LIVING LAID TO FARM METHODS.

Efforts to reduce the cost of living through increased production and better distribution of the country's foods are detailed in the annual report of Secretary Houston of the Department of Agriculture, recently made public.

Records of the Department show that, except for meat and dairy products the per capita production of the leading food commodities in the United States has remained about the same, despite the rapid growth of population. Statistics presented cover a period of sixteen years. The population has increased in that time about 33 per cent. There is ground for optimism, the report says, as to the ability of the nation not only to supply itself with food but increasingly to meet the needs of the world.

One of the principal aims of the Department has been to increase meat production. The report shows a steady growth since 1913 in the output of beef and an advance in the number of swine every year since 1899. More extensive sheep raising is recommended as a source of food. It is pointed out that only one farm in seven in the United States now supports sheep. Fifty million sheep, it is said, could be added to the country's flocks.

"Sharp fluctuations of yield and price from season to season tend to stimulate speculative and superficial farming and to discourage the systematic crop rotation and thorough cultural practice which are essential to an enduring and economically sound agriculture," says the report. "It is obvious that in large measure stabilization of production must be brought about through the use of better adapted or improved crop varieties, more systematic and rational crop rotations and improved agricultural practices generally, including in many sections, larger attention to livestock production.

"As the principles of crop improvement are better understood and more generally applied, larger yields per acre should result. In addition a great deal can be accomplished through increase of soil fertility and better cultural methods. Enough has been done in this direction by the state experiment stations and the Department * * * to justify the expectation that considerably increased acre yields will be brought about in a large part of the area adapted to the staple food crops."

A VERY HELPFUL ORGANIZATION.

The American Specialty Manufacturing Association is an organization concerning which it would be difficult to say too many good things. This society held its annual convention recently at the city of Pittsburgh. It is composed of manufacturers of various special lines of food, as is suggested by its name, and is national in composition and character, its membership extending from coast to coast. It has an admirable motto, which is that nothing but pure wholesome goods shall be put on the market and that the containers in which these goods are sold shall be so labeled as to convey to the consuming public a correct knowledge of the true composition of the products. This single feature is sufficient to commend the American Specialty Manufacturing Association to the good will, the confidence and the support of all men and women who are interested in the manufacture of pure, wholesome articles of food. The idea of the association is to protect its members while at the same time protecting the great public, the majority of whom are in the habit of purchasing household necessities largely on faith. One of the things done at the Pittsburgh session was the adoption of a resolution urging the enactment of a food law for the strengthening of the federal and state food departments, making the provisions for the protection of the consumer considerably more drastic than they are at present. A national organization of this character is necessarily of great value to the people of the United States. It is always a mighty helper to the food officials of the several states, as well as to the national food bureau. The Bulletin observes its growing strength with much delight and wishes it constantly increasing power.

PROSECUTIONS ORDERED DURING OCTOBER AND NOVEMBER.

During the month of October 43 prosecutions were ordered under the various food laws of the Commonwealth, 31 less than were ordered in September. In November 74 prosecutions were ordered, 31 more than in October.

In October Philadelphia furnished the solitary prosecution instituted under the act regulating the sale of eggs. In November no prosecution was ordered under this act.

During October 2 prosecutions were ordered under the cold storage products act. These were for selling eggs not properly marked as fresh, and the offenses occurred in Blair and Philadelphia counties. In November 42 similar prosecutions were ordered, all for the same offense. They were brought in Allegheny, Beaver, Mercer, Philadelphia, Washington and Westmoreland counties.

Under the oleomargarine act three prosecutions were ordered in Luzerne and Philadelphia counties in October. One was for selling oleomargarine colored yellow as butter; 2 were for selling it without a license. Allegheny, Beaver and Crawford counties furnished the offenses against this act during November and they were three in number, all for selling uncolored oleomargarine without a license.

Philadelphia dealers were charged with five offenses against the lard act in October, all being the sale of imitation lard as the pure article. In November 4 prosecutions were ordered in the same city for a similar offense.

Lackawanna, Lehigh, McKean and Philadelphia counties furnished the violations of the pure food act reported during the month of October, six in number. One of these was for the sale of chocolate fudge coated with a resinous glaze; one for the sale of flour containing nitrous acid; one for the sale of peaches unfit for food purposes, and 3 for the sale of butter containing an excessive amount of water. Seventeen violations were reported for November, all occurring in Philadelphia. One was for the sale of raisins containing sulphur dioxide; one for the sale of goat meat as mutton; one for the sale of vanilla compound misbranded; 2 for the sale of extract vanilline misbranded; 2 for the sale of cottonseed oil as olive oil; 2 for the sale of cakes colored with a coal tar color; one each for the sale of grapes, rye flour, Neufchatel cheese, calf sweetbreads unfit for food purposes, and 4 for the sale of beef kidneys unfit for food.

Luzerne, Monroe, Montgomery and Schuylkill counties furnished 11 violations of the cream and milk act in October. Four of these were for the sale of cream low in butter fat; 2 for the sale of milk low in fat and solids, partially skimmed; 2 for the sale of milk low in fat and solids, skimmed and watered; 3 for the sale of milk low in fat and solids, watered. Six violations of this act were reported during November. They occurred in Chester, Northampton and Schuylkill counties. Four were for the sale of cream low in butter fat; one for the sale of milk low in fat and solids; one for the sale of milk low in fat and solids, partially skimmed and containing added water.

Bedford, Blair, Centre, Clearfield, Philadelphia and Wyoming counties furnished 15 violations of the non-alcoholic drinks act.

Two of these were for the sale of intoxicants under the guise of non-alcoholic beverages. The others were largely the sale of mead and pop of various sorts either imitations of the genuine article or containing saccharin or coal tar or sulphur dioxide.

No further October violations were reported, but during the month of November one Beaver county dealer was charged with violating the fresh meat act, his offense being, as charged, the sale of Hamburg steak preserved with sulphites. One Venango county dealer was charged, under the sausage act, with selling Vienna style sausage containing vegetable flour.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

There is one judge in Chicago who believes that violation of the food statutes constitutes a high crime, and that those found guilty of breaking the laws passed for the protection of the public health do not make desirable citizens, and for that reason recently turned down the application of Morris Bressler and Joseph Gratz who applied for citizenship papers. The judge pointed out that by their offenses the men have proved themselves unworthy of the protection of the Stars and Stripes and that they had not only acted contrary to good morals, but endangered public health as well. Bressler was convicted in 1915 of selling rotten eggs for food purposes and was fined $200 and costs. Within the past six years Gratz was convicted of selling unwholesome meat to poor people in his neighborhood.

The Crown of Toledo of the Harrison line carried 200,000 cases of salmon, valued at $1,200,000 when she left San Francisco for England. This is the largest cargo of salmon ever carried out of San Francisco harbor. She also carried 75,000 cases of California canned fruits and vegetables for England via the Panama canal.

The juice of grapes, apples and many other fruits can be concentrated by means of the freezing method developed by the United States Department of Agriculture.

Sophie 19th, the world's champion Jersey cow, begins her eighth lactation period at the age of 12 years. After piling up a long distance record of 75,980.8 pounds of milk, containing 4,434.45 pounds of butter fat in six consecutive lactation periods this champion cow appears to be weakened in no way and seems capable of more than maintaining the average of her present records.

The oldest industry in the world is the gathering of salt. It has been manufactured in Italy, the real home of the salt industry, for the past 2,500 years. In some countries salt is so scarce that it is obtained through the ashes of grass and palm and other plants. Salt has been the cause of wars and at various times has been used as currency by civilized tribes.

The report of the United States government shows that there was less butter, cheese and eggs in storage October 1st, 1916, than there was the same time in 1915. Butter in storage October 1st, 1915, according to the best information obtainable, was 99,449,607 pounds, while the same date this year there were 88,909,646 pounds. The holding of cheese the same time was 22,622,367 pounds as compared with 22,408,699 pounds. The number of eggs, however, shows a decided decrease. Last year there were 5,019,022 cases in storage while this year there are only 4,184,283 cases.

There are fifty-five sardine canneries on the Maine coast, the average annual output being between 1,500,000 and 2,000,000 cases. On account of the keen competition between them—they are operated by thirty-five companies—the sardine industry is no longer the gold mine that it used to be when sardines in oil were selling at $6 and $8 a case of one hundred cans. Prices have dropped to a point where they did not even cover actual cost of production a year ago. This condition has been brought about through the lack of any proper organization or co-operation among the packers.

Sixty-seven state agricultural colleges and experiment stations are devoted to the development of agriculture. Their endowment, plant and equipment amount to $160,000,000, with 5,500 teachers and a resident student body of 75,000. Their annual income is $35,000,000.

Creameries of Iowa during the past year produced 97,628,788 pounds of creamery butter which sold for $26,933,825. While the increase in production is 8.7 per cent. greater than last year, the increase in the sale value of the product is even greater, due to the fact that the New York market maintained an average of 32.43 cents per pound, the highest yearly average on record. Nearly five-sixths of Iowa's creamery butter is sold outside of the state, principally in the eastern markets. The other one-sixth is consumed in the state together with about 20,000,000 pounds of country butter produced annually.

Iowa's dairy products last year, outside of milk, were valued at $36,671,825. The amount of the cheese produced in the twelve factories in the state was 681,315 pounds.

Many stockmen will hear with some surprise that the five great western markets received more cattle in October than in any previous month of their history. Receipts were about 1,132,000 head and there was no great shortage of feed or panic to drive them in. Production has evidently increased under the stimulus of good prices. Not many years ago such a run of cattle would have broken the market's back, but this year they were all absorbed readily, though prices were lower on medium and common kinds. Beef consumption is large, the export demand is good and the call for stockers, feeders and breeders sufficient to take these kinds at fair prices. The fear of a cattle shortage has passed, but we expect to see during this winter a shortage of good corn fed beef.—National Stockman and Farmer.

It looks very much as if the life of the trading stamp would be short-lived in Indiana, where the United States District Court at Indianapolis has recently handed down an opinion which dissolves an injunction granted a mercantile firm by the lower court. The Indiana trading stamp law provides that these concerns shall pay an annual license fee of $1,000 for the privilege of doing business, and the same amount for each dealer to whom they sell stamps. This makes the business prohibitory. The mercantile firm immediately applied for and secured an injunction which restrained any state or county official from enforcing the law.

Miss M. E. Pennington, chief of the Research Laboratory of the Bureau of Chemistry, Washington, D. C., lately testified that eggs, poultry and other foodstuffs of like nature can be kept in cold storage for at least twelve months with no deterioration in food value. To conserve the egg supply, she said, it is essential to send the spring eggs into storage and keep them for use during the lean season, as it has been well proven that they are the best eggs of the productive year, and most able to stand storage.

The United States Department of Agriculture has a large force which devotes its entire time to developing new by-products and methods of saving material now wasted.

More than 260,000 boys and girls were enrolled in 1915 in agricultural and canning clubs conducted co-operatively by the state colleges and the Department of Agriculture.

Diseases of animals cause losses of $212,000,000 a year in the United States. Much of this loss is preventable.

The 48 states of the Union are now spending $280,000,000 annually on good roads.

The population of the United States has increased by 24,000,000 people in the last fifteen years, and the number of beef animals has decreased 6,000,000 and sheep 10,000,000, while hogs have increased only 11,000,000.

The prices of meat animals—hogs, cattle, sheep and chickens—to producers of the United States increased 4.1 per cent. from August 15 to September 15; in the past six years prices increased in like period 0.9 per cent. On September 15 the index figure of prices for these meat animals was about 23.7 per cent. higher than a year ago, 10.5 per cent. higher than two years ago, and 22.5 per cent. higher than the average of the past six years on September 15.

No oleomargarine for state institutions except prisons in Iowa is the edict of the Board of Control of the state and the action of the Board shows that they are in sympathy with the dairy industry of the state.

Health authorities in Memphis, Tenn., are having a battle with milk producers over the question of pasteurization. The producers are using the original theory that raw milk contains no more germs than the pasteurized in support of their stand.

Eggs are higher than ever before at this season. The time to plan for the winter egg supply was last spring but much may yet be done to increase it. Provide comfortable quarters for the hens. Give them plenty to eat and begin in time to keep them from getting thin as their natural food supply fails. A little time and labor with an appropriation of feed, may make the farm flock a money maker this winter instead of a bill of expense.

Back in the seventies a Frenchman named Peller settled in California. He brought a single prune tree from France, which then produced more prunes than any other country. This lone tree was planted and prospered. From it came the prune industry of the Pacific Coast which supplies most of the needs of this continent and a considerable quantity to other countries. Peller and his prune tree were worth millions to the Coast states.

During the twenty-five years in which the tuberculin test has been in use it has been applied to hundreds of thousands of animals, according to E. G. Hastings, bacteriologist of the Agricultural Experiment Station, Madison, Wis. He says that in spite of its fairly general and very satisfactory use not all of the opposition to the test has been overcome. "Even now," he says, "there are those who insist that the injection of tuberculin may produce tuberculosis in healthy animals. Such statements are wholly without foundation. It is impossible for any tubercle bacilli to remain alive after the prolonged heating required to produce the tuberculin and thus the production of tuberculosis by its use is impossible."

According to the United States census Missouri's 21,000,000 hens lay 111,000,000 dozen eggs annually. If these figures are correct the average hen lays about 63 eggs a year, a poor record. One reason why hens are not more productive is because they are usually half fed. It is false economy to expect them to pick their living from the leavings of other stock. Many farmers admit that they feed their hens nothing during the summer. In so doing they are saving feed but losing money. A productive hen requires from 70 to 80 pounds of feed a year.—Bulletin of Missouri Experiment Station.

It is estimated by a sugar expert that the consumption of sugar in the United States from January 1 to June 30 was 2,137,733 tons, which is an increase of 29,297 tons over the consumption during the first six months of last year.

The German beet crop this year is expected to produce not less than 2,500,000 tons of raw sugar.

In Wisconsin's 900 creameries and 1,200 cheese factories thousands of men are employed. The annual cheese production is 120,000,000 pounds more than it was twenty-five years ago. Last year the state produced 175,000,000 pounds of cheese and 131,000,000 pounds of butter.

According to the Pacific Dairy Review dairy inspectors in California give farmers selling bad cream the alternative of pouring the stuff away themselves or of taking chances of arrest and prosecution. This procedure * * * gets results and that is the main thing.

Peanuts were grown on 276,000 acres of Texas soil this year. At 30 bushels per acre the season's crop exceeds 8,000,000 bushels.

Curtailment of profits because of the increase in the cost of wheat and flour was instrumental in causing 185 bakers in the United States to fail in business during June and August, according to figures compiled by the National Association of Master Bakers through trade channels.

The unprecedented sum of $25,000 has been refused for Sophie 19th, of the Hood farm—world's record long distance butter cow and world's record Jersey. The offer was made by May Irwin, the actress.

Mottled butter is due largely to uneven distribution of salt.

The market gardeners in the outskirts of Paris, who supply that city with fresh produce, average in extent from one-half to two acres each. There are about 1,200 of these small farms that produce crops valued at $1,000 an acre each year. This yield is the more remarkable when compared with $140 per acre produced by American gardeners on Western Long Island. The high yield is obtained by the French gardeners through the liberal use of fertilizers and intensive methods of cultivation. Before planting the gardener digs up the top soil and mixes it with fertilizer. During winter and early spring the growing vegetables are produced under glass, usually bell shaped but much produce is raised without glass.

While it is possible to obtain sugar from the maple tree and sorghum sugars from broom corn, as well as from fruits and some of the palms, the world's supply is obtained mainly from two sources—the sugar cane and beet roots. Cane sugar is grown entirely between 30 degrees north latitude and 20 degrees south latitude. Beet sugar is a product of the temperate one and its cultivation is confined to the United States and Europe. At present the world's supply is about equally divided between cane and beet sugar.

Hydrated lime is usually an exceptionally good means of correcting soil acidity because its physical condition permits even distribution. If hydrated lime is fairly pure a ton of it may be more effective than a ton of fresh-burned lump lime on the farm, simply because the latter is often poorly distributed. A ton of lump lime has more strength, the hydrated lime having been diluted with water to produce slaking, but when small quantities are used evenness in distribution is an important factor.

The "Dispatch Sheet" of a Well Known Business Man.

"I have a new wrinkle of my own; what I call my 'Dispatch Sheet.' When I get to my office, my 'Dispatch Sheet' is ready just like the 'Dispatch Sheet' of a 'Train Dispatcher.' I have a sheet of paper about 12-18 inches. I have a column for engagements and things promised by me. I have another column for engagements and things promised to me. I have another column for the most important immediate pending matters for that day. I have a space for office reports, etc. It's simply a method of my own by means of which I have a map right in front of me where I get a complete vision of what I've got to do. Of course I have a blank column for the 'unexpected,' which does not always happen; and yet sometimes this is the most crowded column of the bunch. Try it. When you look over your 'Dispatch Sheet' at the end of the week, you can see what you have done."

“All the world's a jury, and to all intents and purposes, we're all on trial. The worst of it is (or the best) that there's no chance to 'object,' no leave to file a 'demurrer,' and you can't get a 'continuance' on any grounds whatsoever. You must plead your case,' right now and on the dot, or suffer judgment by 'default.' Buyer, seller, maker, dealer, user—the eyes of the jury are upon us.”—Melvin O. Hon. Samuel Dixon, M. D., LL. D., D. Sc., Commissioner of Health of Pennsylvania, in a bulletin sent out quite recently says: "They, (referring to parents), don't stop to think that you need something besides a name to make real food. The result of this is that we see every day many little children stunted in stature and with soft, weak muscles, all because of a want of well-balanced diet. Many of these little ones, for instance, have been fed regularly on bread and molasses, and thus missed entirely fat and albumen. Such children have little or no resistance to disease and often fall victim of tuberculosis."

Dr. Dixon goes on further and says, that the colt, the calf, and the pig do not need any help, "but who will teach the parents a little of the things they should know about their children, and don't?"

Some writers of sensational articles in the newspapers, plainly written for an ulterior purpose, assert that milk and butter, and particularly milk is the cause of tuberculosis. Is it any wonder that parents don't know what their children should eat. The pig and the calf and the colt get their growth through a well-balanced ration that nature has prepared for them, but could they read some of the newspaper articles, they would begin to think the food prepared by nature for them was not as good as a substitute, and they too would be eating bread and molasses, instead of the well-balanced diet supplied by nature in milk.

It is a blessed thing that the dumb animals can't read. It is left for man, carried away by sensational articles, to substitute the natural diet of the young which produces energy, heat and growth, for one that results in many little children "stunted in stature, and with soft muscles, weak muscles." It is also stated on reliable authority that miners in the anthracite coal fields cannot for any great length of time maintain their health by using a substitute for butter.

Recent investigations carried on by Dr. Mendel of Yale, Dr. Osborne of Connecticut, and Dr. McCullon of Wisconsin University, reveal the fact that butter and milk contain certain food elements that are necessary for the growth of the young. Experiments were carried on by the above noted scientists by feeding a diet of fats similar to those used in the manufacture of oleomargarine to young animals. It was found that their growth in a short time was stopped. By changing their diet to milk, or butter, they resumed their normal condition of growth.

Milk fat is nature's food, intended for nourishing the young. It might be termed "life fat," as it comes from the milk of live animals, while oleomargarine fats are "dead fats," or fats taken from dead animals.

The most nutritious part of butter is the volatile fatty acid content. Butter contains about eight per cent. of the latter, while oleomargarine does not contain any except the little that comes from the milk used in its manufacture.

For growing children, milk fat is a necessity as an article of food, and oleomargarine cannot take its place.

THE OLEOMARGARINE SITUATION IN CONGRESS.

The oleomargarine interests are getting very busy starting a propaganda to permit them to sell colored oleomargarine. A bill has been introduced in Congress by Mr. Aswell of Louisiana, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture, to tax oleomargarine one cent a pound, and the same to be put up in cartons. This bill strikes out the 10-cent tax on colored oleomargarine and substitutes the one-cent tax in the place of it.

The great bulk of oleomargarine sold to-day is paying $\frac{1}{4}$ of a cent a pound tax, and is uncolored. The oleo people are stating in their literature that the tax on oleomargarine is 10 cents a pound and that they want to have it reduced to one cent a pound. It is surprising to see how this propaganda is being used by city papers, the editors who certainly know, or should know the law—that the tax on uncolored oleomargarine is $\frac{1}{4}$ of a cent a pound, instead of 10 cents a pound. The argument is made that the object of this reduction is to reduce the high cost of living. The falsity of this statement cannot be better proven than by the evidence of a leading oleo manufacturer several years ago before the Committee of Agriculture. He said: "That the natural color of oleomargarine was white, and that the white was of a better grade than that which was colored, because by coloring it they could use inferior oils." This same manufacturer before four persons said, after he left the witness stand: "That the oleo people had made a mistake in not standing by their color of white in the start," and he further said: "Of course, there is more money in the yellow than the white."

And this is the "milk in the cocoanut." Plain as the a, b, c's. They want the yellow color not to reduce the high cost of living, but to get more of the yellow metal.

The law in Pennsylvania prohibits the coloring of oleomargarine, and the evidence given before a Committee of the Legislature of that State a few years ago by the President of the State Federation of Labor was: "That when it was uncolored it sold cheaper and was of a better grade than when it was colored." This same labor leader said: "That when oleomargarine was colored it could not be readily distinguished from butter, and that the cow could not stand up against that unfair competition, and if it was permitted, oleomargarine would put the dairy cow out of business and eventually we would be paying the same price for oleomargarine that we are now paying for butter. It would be another case over of the Beef Trust in wiping out competition."

In Pennsylvania prior to the enforcement of the present law, prohibiting the coloring of oleomargarine, it was sold in imitation of yellow butter, and followed the price of butter within a few cents, and was of an inferior quality. Since coloring is not permitted, oleomargarine has a market of its own and is selling nearer its market value than when it was colored.

Supply and demand regulate the prices of the farmer's products, because they are sold in the open markets, bid up or down as the case may be. And butter is no exception to this rule. It is also a law of economics that these products have a cost value, and if the selling price drops below cost, production is curtailed. If we interpret the market condition of dairy products correctly, we need more dairy farmers instead of passing laws to reduce the number.

It is not likely that the Agricultural Committee of Congress will pass Mr. Aswell's bill, but there is danger of having some clause or amendment tacked on the revenue bill, or some other bill to permit these counterfeiters to pay a cent-a-pound tax and permit them to color their product, which would mean, instead of reducing the high cost of living, millions of dollars in the pockets of this rapacious monopoly.

The National Dairy Union appeals to farmers and dairymen of this country to get in touch at once by letter or otherwise with their members of Congress, and state that under no condition will farmers submit in having oleomargarine colored and thereby permitting unfair competition with butter.

We appeal to the farm and dairy press to give this matter publicity.

UPHOLDING OUR ICE CREAM LAW.

Supreme Court of the United States, Nos. 40 and 50—October term, 1916. The Hutchinson Ice Cream Co., et al., Plaintiffs in Error vs. The State of Iowa, in error to the Supreme Court of the State of Iowa. A. B. Crawl, Plaintiff in Error vs. Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in error to the Supreme Court of the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Justice Brandeis delivered the opinion of the Court.

These cases were argued together. In each a State statute which prohibits the sale of ice cream containing less than a fixed percentage of butter fat is assailed as invalid under the fourteenth amendment: the Supreme Court of each State having held its statute constitutional. State v. Hutchinson Ice Cream Co., 168 Iowa 1; Commonwealth vs. Crawl, 245 Pa. Stat. 554. Iowa makes 12 per cent. the required minimum; Pennsylvania 8 per cent. The material provisions of the several statutes are copied in the margin.*

The right of the State under the police power to regulate the sale of products with a view to preventing frauds or protecting the public health is conceded by plaintiffs in error. And they do not contend that the particular percentages of butter-fat set by Iowa and Pennsylvania are so exacting as to be in themselves unreasonable. Thirteen other States have by similar legislation set 14 per cent. as the minimum; five other States 12 per cent.; only eight States have fixed a percentage as low as Pennsylvania; and the United States Department of Agriculture has declared 14 per cent. to be standard. The main objection urged is this: To require that ice cream, in order to be legally salable, must contain some butter-fat is a regulation so unreasonable and arbitrary as to be a deprivation of property without due process of law and a denial of the equal protection of the laws. To support this contention the following trade facts are shown:

The ice cream of commerce is not iced or frozen cream. It is a frozen confection—a compound. The ingredients of this compound may vary widely in character, in the number used and in the proportions in which they are used. These variations are dependent upon the ingenuity, skill and judgment of the maker, the relative cost at a particular time or at a particular place of the possible ingredients, and the requirements of the market in respect to taste or selling price. Thus, some Philadelphia ice cream is made of only cream, sugar and a vanilla flavor. In making other Philadelphia ice cream the whites of eggs are added; and according to some formulas vanilla ice cream may be made without any cream or milk whatsoever; for instance by proper manipulation of the yolks of eggs, the whites of eggs, sugar, syrup and the vanilla bean. All of these different compounds are commonly sold as ice cream; and none of them is necessarily unwholesome.

Plaintiffs in error contend that as ice cream is shown to be a generic term embracing a large number and variety of products and the term as used does not necessarily imply the use of dairy cream in its composition, it is arbitrary and unreasonable to limit the ice cream of commerce to that containing a fixed minimum of butter-fat. But the legislature may well have found in these facts persuasive evidence that the public welfare required the prohibition enacted. The facts show that in the absence of legislative regulation the ordinary purchaser at retail does not and cannot know exactly what he is getting when he purchases ice cream. He presumably believes that cream or at least rich milk is among the important ingredients; and he may make his purchase with a knowledge that butter fat is the principal food value in cream or milk. Laws designed to prevent persons from being misled in respect to the weight, measurement, quality or ingredients of an article of general consumption are a common exercise of the police power. The legislature defines the standard article or fixes some of its characteristics; and it may conclude that fraud or mistake can be effectively prevented only by prohibiting the sale of the article under the usual trade name, if it fails to meet the requirements of the standard set. Laws prohibiting the sale of milk or cream containing less than fixed percentages of butter fat present a familiar instance of such legislation. Cases in the State courts upholding laws of this character are referred to in the margin? This court has repeatedly sustained the validity of similar prohibitions. Schmidinger vs. Chicago, 226 U. S. 578. Armour & Co. v. North Dakota, 240 U. S. 510.

It is specially urged that the statutes are unconstitutional because they do not merely define the term ice cream; but arbitrarily prohibit the sale of a large variety of wholesome compounds theretofore included under the name ice cream. The acts appear to us merely to prohibit the sale of such compounds as ice cream. Such is the construction given to the act by the Supreme Court of Iowa. State v. Hutchinson Ice Cream Co., 168 Iowa 1, 15, which is of course binding on us. We cannot assume, in the absence of a definite and authoritative ruling, that the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania would construe the law of that State otherwise. The conviction here under review was for selling the "compound" as ice cream, so that we are not called upon to determine whether the State may in the exercise of its police power prohibit the sale even of a wholesome product, if the public welfare appear to require such action—and if, as here, interstate commerce is not involved. See Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 685; Schollenberger v. Pennsylvania, 171 U. S. 1, 15.

In view of the conclusion stated above it is unnecessary to consider whether the statutes are or are not sustainable as health measures; and upon this we express no opinion.

The judgment in each case is affirmed.

FEW EGGS IN COLD STORAGE.

With less than an average of three eggs to a person remaining in the cold storage warehouses of the State, a serious egg shortage is being faced in Pennsylvania unless the supply of southern eggs is steady and Pennsylvania poultrymen can hasten the laying period of the hens and bring forth a supply that will partially meet the demand.

During the three month period from October 1 to January 1 over ten million dozen eggs were disposed of by the cold storage warehouses of the State. In October the amount in storage according to report of the Dairy and Food Bureau of the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture was 12,220,857 dozen, but the January report shows just 2,175,992 dozen eggs in storage. Large shipments of eggs abroad have greatly reduced the holdings of the cold storage warehouses, one house alone sending almost a million dozen abroad in one shipment.

Dairy and Food Commissioner James Foust says: "Pennsylvania is facing a serious egg shortage with less than three eggs per capita in cold storage at the present time. A recent shipment of 92 carloads or almost a million dozen eggs abroad shows the extent to which the export trade has reduced the Pennsylvania supply. The egg supply is now coming from the Southern States and any congestion on the railroads is going to bring about a serious shortage in eggs. The large cities depend upon the cold storage supply during the rest season of the Pennsylvania hen."

During the past three months there has been a reduction of butter in cold storage from 9,555,966 pounds to 5,069,830 pounds. This is a million pounds more butter than was held at the same time last year.

An unusual feature of the cold storage reports is the immense amount of poultry in storage. At the present time there are 4,135,311 pounds of poultry in storage against 1,931,423 pounds on October 1 and 2,305,311 pounds a year ago. The high price of poultry feed has caused many farmers to sell off much of their poultry and the estimates of the poultry experts of the Department of Agriculture that there will be a forty per cent. shortage in farm poultry this spring seem to be borne out in the above figures.

An immense amount of game has been placed in storage, the report showing 46,384 pounds on hand against 8,738 pounds last year at this time. There has been an increase in the holdings of carcasses of beef, the present figures showing 612,607 pounds against 64,953 pounds three months ago and 588,685 pounds a year ago. In parts of carcasses of beef there are 1,674,387 pounds against 1,043,455 pounds three months ago and 759,141 pounds at the same time last year. There is an increase in the cold storage holdings of veal and sheep over the same period last year but a decrease in the holding of hogs of from 369,421 pounds a year ago to 122,570 pounds at the present time. The figure three months ago was 119,845 pounds showing that little pork had been added during the fall months.

Out of seventy-one cold storage warehouses reporting, forty hold eggs, 39 butter, 16 fish, 27 poultry, 7 carcasses of beef, 15 parts of carcasses of beef, 4 carcasses of veal, mutton and pork and 10 parts of carcasses of pork.

Philadelphia cold storage warehouses report 1,011,960 dozen of eggs in shell, 251,839 pounds of eggs out of shell and 3,204,000 pounds of butter in storage and Pittsburgh warehouses contain 235,860 dozen of eggs in shell, 124,400 pounds of eggs out of shell and 541,149 pounds of butter.

OYSTER PACKING IS PUT ON HIGH PLANE BY MARYLAND STATE BOARD OF HEALTH.

"Delighted," is the way one of Baltimore's largest oyster packers expressed himself when told that the State Board of Health had formulated a set of rules to be followed by all the oyster packers in both city and State.

For many years this great industry, which produces to the city over a million dollars each season, has suffered by reason of the many published accounts as to the slack sanitary methods used in putting the commodity on the market.

Today the one hope of the packers has, to a large degree, been realized, and Maryland oysters will go out into the market of the world signed and sealed with the established fact that they have been prepared in nothing but the most sanitary way.

The rules to be observed in the handling of the bivalves as prepared by the State Board of Health are as follows:

1. Every building or room used as a shucking-house shall be constructed and equipped as hereinafter provided and the operations carried on in such buildings or rooms shall be conducted in such a manner that the purity and wholesomeness of the shellfish handled therein shall not be impaired.

2. All rooms in which shucked oysters are packed, stored, washed or otherwise handled shall be separate and apart from the rooms in which oysters are opened.

3. Rooms in which oysters are shucked and in which shucked oysters are packed shall be provided with floors which can be readily cleansed and such floors must be cleaned daily. Sidewalks and ceilings shall be kept in a clean condition at all times. Whenever and wherever new rooms are provided in which oysters are to be shucked or packed, the same shall be provided with smooth, water-tight floors and the side walls of such rooms shall be constructed of smooth, hard material.

4. All shucking-houses shall be adequately lighted and ventilated, and shall be provided with an abundant supply of water.

5. All shucking-houses shall be provided with adequate drainage to lead all waste liquids outside of the building and into a suitable sewer or cesspool, or to some other point where they can be disposed of without creating a nuisance. Waste liquids must not be disposed of by emptying into any stream in which shellfish are grown or floated.

6. Shucking benches constructed of materials which can be readily cleansed must be provided, and such benches shall be kept in a clean condition.

7. All utensils and containers in which shucked oysters are placed must be of such material and construction to enable them to be readily cleansed. They must be thoroughly cleansed and then scalded out with hot water or steam before beginning each day's work. Knives used by shuckers must be subjected to the same treatment.

8. Shucked oysters may be washed with clean, unpolluted water for a period not in excess of ten minutes. The soaking of shucked oysters is prohibited.

9. A solid pack shall be required when shucked oysters are sold by measure. For the purpose of this rule a solid pack will be understood to mean oysters which have been drained substantially of all their adhering liquor.

10. Shucked oysters offered for shipment must be packed in closed containers and thoroughly iced. Oysters must not be packed in contact with ice.

11. Oysters must be shipped the same day they are opened, unless stored at a temperature of 45 degrees F. or below, or packed in shipping containers and thoroughly iced.

12. Cans in which shucked oysters are shipped must not be used a second time for this purpose unless thoroughly scalded.

13. Waste materials must not be permitted to accumulate in rooms where shucked oysters are packed and such materials must be removed daily.

14. All shucking-houses shall be provided with running water, soap and clean towels to enable employes to wash their hands. Employes shall be required to wash their hands before beginning work and after visiting the toilet.

15. The outer clothing worn by persons engaged in shucking oysters shall be of material which can be readily cleaned and only clean garments shall be worn.

16. No person with infected wounds in the hands or arms shall be permitted to open oysters nor handle the same.

17. No person afflicted with any communicable disease shall be employed in any shucking-house nor shall any person so affected be permitted to enter the rooms of such shucking-house where oysters are opened, packed or otherwise handled.

18. No person shall be allowed to live or sleep in any packing-house where oysters are shucked or packed.

SHEEP IN PENNSYLVANIA INCREASE.

For the first time in ten years there has been no decline in the number of sheep in the State, but the campaign for more sheep waged by Secretary of Agriculture Charles E. Patton has resulted in not only overcoming an annual decrease of 25,000 sheep in the State but has brought about an actual increase of between 5,000 and 6,000 sheep according to statistics just announced by the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture.

Annually there has been a decrease of three per cent of the sheep in the State, but the unusual efforts put forth during the past year by Secretary Patton and the wool and textile associations has resulted in creating a new interest in the sheep industry and many farmers have added flocks while fewer ewes have been sold. Through the Department of Agriculture hundreds of sheep have been brought into the State and despite the high prices farmers throughout the State are trying to secure sheep to undertake breeding.

On the recent Agricultural Tours, Secretary Patton urged the farmers at all points to give consideration to sheep raising and the success of the movement is shown by the actual figures. It is estimated that there are now about 812,000 sheep in the State as compared with 806,000 a year ago and there promises to be a steady increase during the present year.

The counties showing the most notable increases are Washington and Greene, the two big sheep counties of the State. In each of these counties the increase was four per cent or over 10,000 sheep. Wyoming county showed an increase of 6 per cent and Delaware 5 per cent. Other counties showing increases were Blair, Bradford, Chester, Clearfield, Dauphin, Fayette, Forest, Fulton, Indiana, Juniata, Lancaster, Mercer, Montgomery, Potter, Snyder, Union, Venango and Warren.

The better protection of the sheep from the ravages of the dogs under the provisions of the Act of 1915 and the splendid prices offered for sheep and wool were incentives to encourage the sheep industry. The Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture sent veterinary experts into other States to examine and purchase sheep for Pennsylvania farmers and many were brought into the State.

During the past year the average price of sheep per head has increased from $5.40 to $7.00 and the average price of wool from 25 cents to 34 cents per pound. The price of sheep is now much higher than the average for the year, few being obtainable for less than $9.00.

Secretary Patton is well pleased with the results of a short campaign for more sheep and advises all farmers who have proper facilities for raising sheep to give the matter careful consideration during the present year.

INSPECT IMPORTED FOOD AND DRUGS.

That increased vigilance on the part of officials in charge of the enforcement of the Food and Drugs Act is required by conditions brought about by the European War to prevent shipment into the United States of adulterated and misbranded foods and drugs is shown by the report of the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, just published. While the volume of imported foods and drugs has decreased since the outbreak of the war, the variety of grades has increased. Likewise the number of shipments in proportion to the quantity is larger, for it is now necessary for importers to get from many sources the supplies which previously could be obtained from one place. One importer may bring in twenty small shipments all obtained in different places and of varying degrees of purity where previously he would have brought in the same quantity in one shipment of uniform quality. This makes it necessary for the inspectors to look out for and examine twenty shipments instead of one.

The high prices prevailing for certain products which can be obtained only from abroad, particularly spices and crude drugs, has increased the temptation to adulterate. According to the Chief Chemist's report shipments of coriander, fennel, celery, anise, cumin, Chinese and Indian mustard, senna leaves, cinchona, ipecac and other products were found to be adulterated and were denied entry into this country. Many shipments of medicines were found to be misbranded, the labels containing false or fraudulent claims as to the curative powers, and such shipments were detained until the misbranding was corrected. Among other articles of food found to be in violation of the law may be mentioned decomposed tomato pastes and products, spoiled sardines, wormy olives, olive oil, pepper, macaroni, and beverages. Special attention was given to milk imported from Canada into the New England States. There was a marked improvement in the wholesomeness of this milk during the year owing to the exclusion of shipments of contaminated milk produced under insanitary conditions.

Branch laboratories are maintained by the Bureau of Chemistry at the principal ports of entry, such as New York, Boston, New Orleans, Philadelphia, San Francisco and many others, in order that analysis may be made of samples of such shipments of foods and drugs offered for entry into this country as are suspected of being adulterated or misbranded. The inspectors scrutinize all invoices of food and drug products that come to this country. The foreign shipper is required to certify to certain facts regarding his foods and drugs before a United States consular officer, and these certificates are attached to the invoices. If the examination of the invoices and the accompanying certificates leads the United States inspectors to suspect that the foods or drugs are adulterated or misbranded, samples are taken for analysis and the shipment held until it has been determined whether the goods are in violation of the law.

The import section of the Food and Drugs Act, in addition to the requirements applied to domestic products, provides that no foods or drugs shall be admitted to this country which are otherwise dangerous to the health of the people of the United States or of a kind forbidden entry into or forbidden to be sold or restricted in sale in the country in which they are made or from which they are exported, or are otherwise falsely labeled in any respect. When goods offered for import are found to be in violation of the law, the importer is notified and given an opportunity to be heard before the officers of the Department in order that he may present any evidence he desires as to why the goods should not be denied entry into the United States. After the hearing, if the Department is still of the opinion that the goods are in violation of the law because of adulteration, they are refused entry into this country; or, if misbranded, they are required to be labeled correctly before being admitted. All the work on imported foods and drugs is handled in co-operation with the customs officers of the Treasury Department.

SAFEGUARDING FOODS AND DRUGS.

In the enforcement of the Food and Drugs Act during the last year, United States Department of Agriculture officials analyzed 29,833 samples of foods and drugs offered for interstate shipment and for import. A physical examination was made of samples from 76,468 shipments offered for import. Of these foreign shipments, 6,353 were found to violate the law in some respects and were either excluded from the country or admitted only after the importers had relabeled them to comply with the law. Of the samples of domestic products analyzed 3,535, either because of the nature of the product or because the label on it did not tell the truth, were found to be in violation of the Federal law. In 1,364 cases the Department recommended to the Department of Justice that criminal prosecutions be instituted against the manufacturers or that the goods be seized. In many cases where there was no evidence of intention to defraud, and where there was merely some easily remedied flaw in the wording of a label, the shipper, after being warned in hearings, voluntarily took steps which made their product fully comply with the requirements. In all, there were held 8,715 such hearings, many of which resulted in the prosecutions indicated and the gathering of evidence for a large number of additional cases, which will be forwarded to the Department of Justice.

The Bureau of Chemistry, in its annual report, also calls attention to the fact that through the system of Service and Regulatory Announcements now in use, manufacturers are given due notice of the requirements and thus are enabled voluntarily to make their products conform to the law. In this way the government achieves its purpose, frequently without entering into needless and very expensive litigation.

In the regulatory work, special emphasis has been given to the control of drug products and foods liable to spoilage and pollution. These frequently constitute a serious menace to health. The food inspectors have been instructed to be particularly watchful for interstate shipments of bad eggs, milk, oysters, and spoiled canned goods, and false and fraudulently labeled medicines and spurious, synthetic drugs.

Curbing Fraudulent Medicines.

Attempts to counterfeit or adulterate imported drugs have been more common since the recent high price and scarcity of many of these products encouraged their imitation. It is interesting to note that of the 1,036 cases terminated in the courts during the year, 198 were brought on account of the false and fraudulent labeling of medicines. In all of these medical cases, save five, the courts found for the government, and this, it is believed, has exercised an important deterrent effect on the vendors of nostrums shipped from one State to another.

The work of controlling the fraudulent labels of medicines and mineral waters has been greatly strengthened by the establishment of a separate office to deal with these matters. At the request of the Secretary of Agriculture an officer of the United States Public Health Service has been detailed to take charge of this work. Moreover, through the close co-operation established with the foods and drugs officials of many of the States, the Department was able to direct the attention of the local authorities to the presence of spurious drugs in their States and, as a result, much of these fraudulent goods in the hands of local dealers and beyond the reach of the Federal authorities were destroyed by State and municipal officers who, in many cases, prosecuted those responsible for the local traffic.

Milk, Eggs, and Oysters.

The co-operation in the sanitary control of the milk supply of small cities described in the report for last year has been extended in Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska and in New England.

It is proposed to repeat this work year after year, extending it each year to new territory. In some localities bad conditions were found, due in the main to insufficient cooling and careless handling. Perhaps the best results of this work has been that it stimulated some of the local authorities to take up similar work independently so that definite permanent improvement of the milk supply of a number of cities has resulted. The co-operative work on the control of the shipment of decomposed eggs described in the report of last year has been extended to cover much of the territory in which shipments originate so that eggs are now candled before shipment far more than formerly and the spoiled eggs destroyed or fed to poultry and stock. At the same time information given to local officials has helped them to curb local traffic in eggs rejected in candling.

The Bureau of Chemistry, after making co-operative sanitary surveys of oyster beds, issued warnings against the interstate shipment of oysters from polluted and doubtful beds and, where these warnings were not regarded, undertook prosecutions. As a result, interstate shipment from such territory was stopped.

Other Adulterations.

The campaign against the sweating of immature oranges and immature grapefruit so as to give the immature fruit the color of ripe fruit has been successful, largely because of the active help of the greater part of the citrus-fruit producers. Comparatively few sweated, immature oranges were offered during the last year, and it is believed the better quality of fruit resulted in a steadier market so that the producer as well as the consumer benefited.

Other forms of adulteration not already mentioned that received especial attention are the adulteration of scallops and canned tomatoes with water, the substitution of colored starch paste for tomato sauce, the reprocessing of spoiled canned goods, the traffic in cull beans, in decomposed tomato products, in rancid olive oil, in wormy horse beans, the substitution of foreign fat for cacao butter in and the addition of cacao shells to, cacao products, the adulteration of rice bran with rice hulls, the coloring of inferior macaroni and of plain noodles, the misbranding of domestic macaroni in simulation of imported goods, and the adulteration of oats with water or weed seeds.

PREVENTS FOOD SPOILAGE.

The recent report of the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, United States Department of Agriculture, indicates that extensive research and experimental work directed towards the prevention of spoilage in food products was done in that bureau last year. The work was directed along three principal lines: 1. Scientific investigations to isolate, identify and learn the habits and methods of work of the micro-organisms or minute bacteria, molds or yeasts which produce spoilage. There are many varieties of these tiny organisms and each variety acts in its own peculiar way. 2. Experiments to determine the best methods of sterilization, refrigeration and sanitation to prevent the growth of micro-organisms which have been isolated, identified and studied. 3. The application to particular foods on a commercial scale of the principles of sterilization, refrigeration and sanitation previously worked out experimentally in the laboratory.

A study was made of the organism causing spoilage in canned sardines. The loss to individual packers of sardines from swelling is sometimes as high as thirty per cent of the pack. It was found that the organism causing the spoilage very rapidly forms spores which are killed only at high temperatures. Experiments showed that when the cans were heated to high temperatures the spores were killed and no swelling or spoilage resulted. In addition to processing at high temperatures it is necessary to use cleanliness in preparing and packing the sardines. The sardine industry has largely adopted the recommendations of the bureau as to the correct methods of handling, preparing and packing the sardines with the result that much loss from spoilage has been prevented.

Experiments were made in connection with the shipment of fresh shrimp. It was found that when prepared in a cleanly manner, suitably boiled in brine, and thoroughly cooled, the shrimp could be shipped for long distances in a prime condition. Many of the shippers have adopted the recommendations of the Department as to the proper methods for handling the shrimp and found them of great value in the conduct of their business.

Studies to prevent decay in fish have been continued. Perhaps no other perishable food is shipped long distances with so little knowledge of what is required to insure arrival in good order. The work was begun in Florida and at the end of the shipping season transferred to the Pacific Coast where transcontinental hauls are under observation.

In order to prevent spoilage in the shipment of poultry and eggs, a precooling plant has been developed, cooled by ice, capable of chilling 15,000 pounds of eggs and poultry a week. This plant costs approximately $800 to install. With ice at $3.00 per ton it has been found in actual commercial use to effect a saving of at least $22 per carload in handling and chilling. It also enables the small shipper who cannot afford to erect a complete refrigerating plant to compete with the largest shippers.

The work upon the transportation of perishables has been facilitated by the improvement of the method of installing resistance thermometers in refrigerator cars so that the temperature of the interior of a considerable number of cars may be observed simultaneously. In the study of the cold storage of eggs particular attention has been paid to the devising of methods to prevent stored eggs from acquiring the so-called "storage taste."

DEFINE VEGETABLE OILS.

Definitions and standards for edible vegetable fats and oils are outlined in Food Inspection Decision 169, just issued by the United States Department of Agriculture under the Food and Drugs Act. These definitions were recommended by the Joint Committee on Definitions and Standards consisting of representatives from the Association of American Dairy, Food and Drug Officials, the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists, and the United States Department of Agriculture. The definitions outlined in the food inspection decision were previously adopted by the two associations named above.

The text of the definitions follows:

Edible fats and edible oils are such glycerids of the fatty acids, as are recognized to be wholesome foods. They are dry and sweet in flavor and odor.

Cacao butter, cocoa butter, is the edible fat obtained from sound cacao beans (Theobroma cacao L.), either before or after roasting.

Cocoonut oil, copra oil, is the edible oil obtained from the kernels of the cocoonut (Cocos nucifera L. or Cocos butyracea L.).

Cochin oil is cocoonut oil prepared in Cochin (Malabar).

Ceylon oil is cocoonut oil prepared in Ceylon.

Corn oil, maize oil, is the edible oil obtained from the germ of Indian corn, maize (Zea mays L.).

Cottonseed oil is the edible oil obtained from the seed of the cotton plant (Gossypium herbaceum L.), or from the seed of other species of Gossypium.

Olive oil, sweet oil, is the edible oil obtained from the sound, mature fruit of the olive tree (Olea europaea L.).

Palm kernel oil is the edible oil obtained from the kernels of the fruit of the palm tree (Elaeis guineensis L. or Elaeis Melanococca Gart.).

Peanut oil, arachis oil, earthnut oil, is the edible oil obtained from the peanut (Arachis hypogaea L.).

Poppy seed oil is the edible oil obtained from the seeds of the poppy (Papaver somniferum L.).

Rape seed oil, rape oil, colza oil, is the edible oil obtained from the seed of the rape plant (Brassica napus L.), or from the seed of closely related Brassica species, which yields oils similar in composition and character to the oil obtained from the seed of Brassica napus L.

Soy bean oil, soy oil, soja oil, is the edible oil obtained from the seed of the soy bean plant (Glycine soja L., Soja hispida Sieb et Zucc., Soja max. (L) Piper).

Sesame oil, gingili oil, teel oil, benne oil, is the edible oil obtained from the seed of the sesame plant (Sesamum indicum De candolle, Sesamum radiatum Schum and Thonn, Sesamum orientale L.).

Sunflower oil is the edible oil obtained from the seed of the sunflower (Helianthus annuus L.).

NATURE AND FUNCTION OF BUTTERFAT AS FOOD.

By J. H. RUSHTON, of Omaha, Neb.

1. Milk is the universal animal food, provided by nature for the support of the young, of its kind.

2. Growth is one of the principal functions of the young in animal life; and this growth is caused by a multiplication of cells in the animal tissue, meaning by "animal tissue," everything connected with the animal from a "life" point of view.

3. The ordinary food, taken in by animals, supports life in the form of maintaining life—maintaining the body; but “maintenance” of life and “maintenance” of the animal body, is very different from “g-r-o-w-t-h,” which means addition to the body and to life. Maintenance of cell life is one thing; but an increase of cell life is another thing.

4. This is true not only of the “human” family, but of the “lower varieties” of animals.

5. Therefore, the facts are—that nature has provided a “universal food” for the “young” of animals and the great function of youth is “growth,” and that this universal food possesses the elements of “growth” in it. These are basic facts—broad and general in their application and well known in our own experience.

6. This argument applies not only to “milk,” as a whole, but to the constituent elements, of which milk is composed: to wit: (a) butterfat, and (b) the solids not fat.

7. It is becoming recognized that skimmilk forms a diet very favorable for “growth.”

8. It is admitted and recognized that butterfat contains in it, this element to promote growth; but butterfat is the basis of butter.

9. Therefore, butter is an article of food, not only capable of maintaining “animal life,” but of promoting the growth of animal life.

10. Now, let us analyze the source of the various animal fats. They can be divided into two classes:

1st. (a) Those that are excreted from the living animal daily, or oftener; and (b) those fats that are secreted by a living animal and stored in various parts of the body, for the purpose of maintaining the life of that specific body; and are not available to any other animal, or to any other use, until that animal secreting them, dies. (aa) The one may be called a “living” product. (bb) The other may be called a “dead” product.

2nd. (c) The one may be said to have a broad and general function of not only maintaining the animal system, but of developing and causing it to grow. (d) The other has a function, limited more or less to maintaining “animal life.”

3rd. (e) The one is available for heat, energy and growth. (f) The other available of heat and energy.

11. It follows from this, and our experience supports the argument, that the more universal the use of milk and the constituent elements of milk by the people, the more the function of animal life is subserved; and the more growth there is. Other foods have large maintaining power; but very few, if any, of them have this “growth” power.

12. The necessity of milk and milk products, as a human food, as being conducive to health, as tending to longevity of life, is recognized by the medical fraternities, is recognized by all health bodies; and is well founded in the experience of mankind from the time of Adam until the present time. The more liberal and the more general its use, the better the youth of our land will be in stature and in health.

13. To illustrate and confirm the above, and to give you a line on our authorities that have investigated that subject, we attach an article by Prof. J. H. Frandsen of the University of Nebraska, who has been looking into these matters along this line.

14. Now, the application of this is, that when you buy Oleo, you purchase animal and vegetable fats in various proportions, that have more or less power to maintain life; but when you buy butter, you have this same power plus the power to promote growth in the human race.

15. You get something when you buy butter, that you don't get when you buy Oleomargarine; and it is this quality of promoting growth, that has given to butter its universal use among enlightened and intelligent people, and given to milk the place it now occupies. All the efforts that can possibly be made to improve the palatability of milk, improve the palatability of butter—go to increase the use and increase this power to promote growth in the human race.

THE HISTORY AND DEVELOPMENT OF FOOD LEGISLATION.

Address by James Foust, Dairy and Food Commissioner, Before the National Association of American Specialty Manufacturers, William Penn Hotel, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Mr. President and Members of the Association: Speech-making is not my notion of the greatest happiness. In spite of that, and of the large subject your committee has given me to discuss within the brief period of fifteen minutes, I accepted with pleasure because the invitation was yours and because I really had something I wanted to say to you.

The history and development of food legislation is what I have been asked to talk about. No one knows how soon after Eve weaned Cain the first food law was passed. Possibly the story should start earlier with that famous apple. Certainly the sanitary food laws of Moses must count, and there are, I am told, traces of food laws in the books of other old peoples.

Adulteration, of course, is not an exclusively modern practice. It existed among the Greeks, the Romans and the Egyptians and there were penalties for it. Those adulterations were crude, of course. Our civilization has become complex. We have changed from the simple foods to the complex foods. In primitive days the individual could judge for himself as to the purity of foods, but with the advent of manufacturing, the Government had to step in with legislation. However, adulteration, as now broadly interpreted, is not necessarily injurious.

We may, for present purposes, skip all that and come to our own time and land.

Away back in the eighteen hundreds, various American states and cities passed milk and vinegar laws. Oleomargarine and lard laws followed. These were all special laws aimed at one or more abuses. The time came when some states saw the need for laws that would deal with the great variety of abuses affecting foods in general. To make a separate law for each product, and to describe and forbid each abuse to which any food might be liable, would be an endless task. Our lawmakers found in the English Food and Drug Act an example of a general way to deal with the matter, and followed it.

With this plan of legislation you are well acquainted. It consists simply of defining rather broadly adulteration and misbranding, prohibiting these offenses, providing penalties therefor, and devising machinery for enforcing the law.

It is this type of law, rather than specific law, that had been generally adopted in America. Those who drafted the national food and drugs act followed the fashion earlier set by a number of the states.

During the years in which its passage was so much talked about, a great many states enacted for their own use the draft proposed for the national act. Still others copied it after its enactment.

Laws of this kind place an especially heavy responsibility upon the executives and the courts. They must not only enforce the law, but use much judgment in deciding to what cases its very broad definitions apply. With half a hundred executives and no one knows how many judges at work, each by himself, confusion beneficial to none and especially bewildering to commerce, was bound to follow. "Uniformity" was the cry heard everywhere. Much extra-legal machinery and some that had legislative authority was invented to hasten the coming of this much desired condition. Conferences, national and local, of food executives; agreements upon method by food chemists; the work of the food standards committee, all have had this object.

Complete uniformity is hard to get. The national food law is a compromise at many points. Even it has been amended and supplemented. That individual legislators should proceed independently to make improvements according to their own notions, should not be a matter for surprise; nor, to those who know what winds of influence blow where laws are a-making, should it be surprising that some of the changes failed to be improvements.

I shall refer to a few, only, of the many directions these changes have taken.

The national act does not absolutely forbid the addition of deleterious substances to foods. It simply limits vaguely their amounts. The burden of proof is placed upon the people not only that such substance has been added, but that it may under the conditions of its use make the food injurious. Such proofs cannot be made, once for all, but must be repeated at great cost in every new case. It would be safer for public health to require him who would use them in foods others are to eat, first to prove their harmlessness. Some states, to remedy this difficulty, have prohibited specifically the addition to foods of a list of substances whose use is generally condemned as certainly or probably hurtful. Under such form of law, all that need to be proved is the presence and addition of any one of these substances.

The national act amply condemns unsanitary materials and conditions of food making and handling, but it looks to the product, rather than to the factory for proof of unsanitary conditions. The method is weak and difficult. Many states are, for this reason, adding sanitary laws to ensure fitness of raw materials, cleanliness of food factories, and health of the operatives.

The labelling clauses of the national act fall short of what the people need. It says "Thou shalt not lie," not "Thou shalt tell the truth." This makes the buying of foods still a good deal of a game of chance. Better labelling laws are still rare, but the passage of false advertising laws is doing much to help the people's case. The passage also of the net weights and measures law, with its positive labelling requirements, is a very distinct advance.

While food laws of the general type prevail, the day of special laws has not gone by. Where the regulative powers of officers enforcing the general laws are broad, as they are in some of the states, there is less need for special laws than where the opposite condition controls. In the latter commonwealths, laws dealing definitely with individual products or classes of products, have been helpful.

I wish now to speak of a related matter that lies outside of the line of my assigned subject. We all know that the abuses in food making and selling have been much cut down. Without the food laws, food executives and the courts, the progress must have been much less. Other agencies have, however, been very helpful, especially the organized activities of upright business men. Acting as individuals, the correction of abuses seemed hopeless to you; pulling together, you gave heart to one another, and were able to make hard and lonely the way of the business crook. Through organization you have been able to secure proper adjustments of regulations that could not wisely have been granted to individuals. Your co-operation has made possible important constructive work. Your legal counsel has guided you. Your educational agencies have helped you to unite in avoiding methods that would injure your business repute. Today, the food executives have no stronger helper than the progressive business men's organization.

The fact is, that your committee on Sanitary Law is so progressive that its recently published draft of a sanitary law has been made far more drastic than any food commissioner would hope to have adopted by the legislature on his sole recommendation. It is prime. "Keep your kitchen clean" is a motto as important as "Keep your scales true" or "Let the label tell."

Another development has much pleased me. It is illustrated by the opening of the research laboratory of the National Canners' Association, and its manning by specialists of the highest repute. It must greatly help the canners to make fine goods, keep down factory losses, and keep up with the public requirements. Would you not find a similar agency, directed by a broad-gauge investigator, helpful to your economic growth?

Finally, I would like to pay my disrespects to the pure food fakir, who fills the columns of the yellow journals with flaring false alarms about good products made by honest men. A roaring bonfire is a thrilling sight, but that is no good reason for an excitable and unscrupulous man lighting up your good haystack, so that he may pass his hat for nickels among the onlookers. At its Detroit meeting, the Association of American Food Officials denounced in no uncertain words the reckless writings of these pikers and four-flushers.

Is a strong organization like yours without means of defense?

GIVE THE CHILDREN MILK.

The value of milk as a food is becoming understood. Seattle, Washington, has hit upon a scheme to provide milk for the poor children at the public schools. A recent issue of Good Housekeeping contained the following article on the subject:

"The success of a year's experimenting has prompted the public school of Seattle, Washington, to adopt as a new rule of pedagogics the slogan 'Fill the youngsters' stomachs and then their minds.' 'Every school day more than 5,000 youngsters attach themselves by straws to the contents of half pint bottles of creamy milk and speedily effect a merger that is helping growing bodies and growing brains. The dominating idea of the school directors' milk distribution plan is to give every school child all the milk he wants, and there is no restriction on healthy appetites except that those children who pay nothing for the milk are served first on the theory that they need it most.

Dr. Ira C. Brown is the chief medical officer of the Seattle public schools. * * * "Adults bore me," says Dr. Brown, "but young ones—why, I can't think of anything I would not be willing to do to help the young ones."

In the work of the school clinic Dr. Brown found that children were sent to the clinic for dosing who had nothing organically wrong. "They weren't sick, they were hungry," he said explaining the inception of the milk distribution. "They needed food in their stomachs, not medicine."

Several of the Seattle high schools and grade schools had adopted the plan of school cafeterias where food is sold at cost, but this did not reach the children in whom Dr. Brown was interested. They were children of parents who were too poor to spend even a nickel a day for hot lunches. Dr. Brown decided that what was needed was free distribution of milk to these children. * * *

The first milk was supplied for nothing by dairymen of the city. So numerous were the proffers that at first there was more milk than was needed. The school directors wished to avoid any appearance of paternalism, and their desire, together with an unexpected protest from the parents of well-to-do children soon put the milk distribution on a strictly business basis. Parents of youngsters who had good homes demanded that their children be allowed to get milk from the school stations. To meet this demand a brass check currency was issued. Every school child who wants checks can have them. Whether the parents pay two and a half cents a check or nothing at all is a secret between parents and principals. The checks all look alike, and each check is good for a half-pint bottle of rich, creamy milk.

The district visiting nurses who are constantly in the homes of the poorer families, obtain the data which guard against any extensive grafting on the community. * * * A pleasant feature of the experiment has been the universal desire to pay for the milk, even though the payment has been as low as an eighth of a cent a bottle.

On very cold days * * * the milk is served hot. In ordinary weather it is taken off the ice. The milk bottle and the paper straw is all the equipment necessary to connect the public school pupils with the base of supplies, and the matter of dish washing is reduced to a minimum. The milk is handled entirely by school employes and through school buildings. Consequently the cost is but two cents a bottle, and of the 5,000 bottles consumed daily 1,000 are given away at a cost to the district of $100 a month. At the close of the first school year in which the experiment was tried * * * there were fifty-eight milk distributing stations. * * *

The results that came from stuffing young stomachs with milk proved rather extraordinary. The first observation of teachers was that noisy children became quiet. Entire class rooms settled down. Scuffling of feet, wriggling of restless bodies, whispering and fidgeting ceased. There followed an increase in attention to the work in hand, and an increase in mental efficiency. The reports of the school principals showed that an average of 15 per cent of the school enrollment made rapid improvement under the milk feeding system.

VALUES OF DIFFERENT GRADES OF MILK IN INFANT FEEDING.

Bulletin 105, Vermont Agricultural Experiment Station, entitled "Studies of the Values of Different Grades of Milk in Infant Feeding," has been issued recently. The bulletin is a most interesting one and a valuable contribution to the subject of infant feeding. An idea of its contents may be gleaned from the following summary:

The answers to seven questions were sought in the course of the experimental trials. These questions with the answers concisely stated are as follows:

1. What fat grade of milk is best adapted to the growth and well being of young animals?

A milk with a nutritive ratio of about 1.3 with a relatively low fat content.

2. Is a milk the fat globules of which are relatively small on that account preferable in the feeding of young animals to a milk the fat globules of which are relatively large?

The size of the fat globules has no practical bearing on the relative values of milks in infant feeding. The alleged superiority of Holstein milk, if really existent, seems more likely to be due to its low fat content than to the size of its fat globules.

3. Does the process of homogenization improve milk as a food for young animals?

The homogenization of the fat does not seem to be helpful, but the casein of the milk is sufficiently modified by the application of this process so that possible benefit may result from its employment.

4. Are condensed (sweetened) or evaporated (unsweetened) milks as well adapted to infant feeding as is normal cow's milk?

Evaporated (unsweetened) milk compared favorably with normal, whole standardized milk, but the sweetened condensed milk proved a thoroughly undesirable food, producing a dangerously fat body.

5. To what extent is the strength of the bones affected by food changes?

The bones of pigs fed a sweetened condensed milk were but two-thirds as strong as those fed normal or evaporated (unsweetened) milk.

6. Does the dilution of a ration affect its food and energy values? Apparently over-dilution of a ration tends to lessen its food value.

7. In the light of the results attained in the present studies and of previous trials, the observations of the writers touching infant feeding, and the testimony of pediatricists, what broad principle may be laid down touching infant feeding?

These principles cannot be stated with safety in a single sentence. The bulletin represents a great deal of work on the part of the authors and a long series of original and painstaking experiments and studies are covered by it.

THE COW AND HER HEALTH.

Dr. L. R. Himmelberger contributes the following article to a recent issue of Hoard's Dairyman:

The most important factor in the control of contagious diseases in animals is the extent of enlightenment of the public. The progress of human medicine has always been hindered by that great barrier to all progress—ignorant public opinion. Veterinary science has had a similar experience. The inroads made by the preventable diseases upon the dairy industry are appalling. Financial losses resulting from infectious diseases have an enormous bearing upon social conditions of rural communities. The farmer who suffers great financial loss through the ravages of infectious abortion, tuberculosis and similar diseases is financially unable to install city conveniences in the farm house or send the boy to college. The recent epidemic of foot and mouth disease which swept the country, no doubt, kept more than one farmer's boy from college, thus depriving the community of educated leadership.

There are really but two ways to control and eradicate contagious diseases: One is by quarantine and the other is by absolute destruction of the causive micro-organism or virus for all time. The successful fight waged against the foot and mouth disease is an excellent illustration of the practical results that can be obtained by the application of these two fundamental principles of disease control.

Disinfection.

The most efficient way to control contagious diseases is the proper use of disinfectants. By this means it is possible to render harmless the discharges of sick animals. To be successful disinfection should be carried out by one who has knowledge of the nature of the disease in question and the character of the micro-organism or germ causing same. The necessity for this is obvious when it is remembered that some disease germs are very resistant to certain destructive agents while very easily killed by others. There are two kinds of disinfection, viz., concurrent disinfection and terminal disinfection. By the first term is meant the continued application of the principles of disinfection from the time the disease first appears until the trouble is over. Terminal disinfection attempts to destroy the infectious material all at one process after the animal or animals have recovered from the disease. This would not be necessary if concurrent disinfection were practiced and all the infectious material were destroyed as fast as it leaves the animal body. During outbreaks of some of the infectious diseases, concurrent disinfection is the only method of value.

Perhaps the most vicious thing about disinfectants as applied by most dairymen is the sense of false security to which they give rise. Certain of the disinfectants on the market possess a very penetrating odor which leads one to believe that efficient work has been done provided the odor is present. It cannot be too vigorously stated that odor is no index of efficiency in disinfection. Another thing to be considered in the control of contagious diseases of the dairy cow is the general laxity in vogue of giving attention to only those animals showing visible signs of illness. It has been established beyond a doubt that animals, to all appearances perfectly normal, in an infected herd may harbor the disease germs and in this way be more vicious spreaders of infection than those visibly sick. This is especially true in infectious abortion. In tuberculosis it is practically impossible to detect the disease by physical examination. Still the infected animals are capable of spreading the disease.

The agent to be used in practical disinfection will vary with the disease being fought and the place to be disinfected. There appears to be a prevailing idea among farmers that any substance so labeled is an efficient disinfectant for the farm buildings. Properly speaking, disinfectants are agents which completely destroy disease producing bacteria in particular and all bacteria in general. Antiseptics are not disinfectants, they prevent or delay the activity of bacteria but do not necessarily cause their destruction. For example, cold is a very efficient antiseptic, but very rarely are disease producing germs destroyed by cold. Disinfectants are not curative of the sick animals, but they may be so wisely used that other animals in the herd are protected from the disease. It is also sometimes believed that deodorizers are disinfectants. Some may possess disinfectant properties, but a deodorizer is not necessarily a disinfectant. The mere removal or disguising of foul odors does not insure the destruction of bacteria.

Classes of Disinfectants.

There are two general classes of disinfectants, viz., physical agents and chemical agents. Physical agents consist of heat and sunlight. Heat is only practical in the sterilization of buckets and the like and needs no further mention. Sunlight is one of the most efficient agents at our disposal in the control of animal diseases if we properly avail ourselves of its disinfective properties. The only practical method of ridding yards and fields of disease germs is furnished by natural agencies. If the field is exposed to the action of the direct rays of the sun and all loose boards and other litter are removed and burned, a fairly efficient disinfection will result, since we know that disease germs do not thrive outside the animal body. The efficiency of the clean-up will be greatly aided if the additional precaution of keeping susceptible animals from the lots is taken.

Of the long list of chemical disinfectants from which selection can be made, only a few answer the demands of efficiency, economy and practicability. Perhaps the most efficient and economical agents of a chemical nature are bichloride of mercury and corrosive sublimate, which has a wide reputation as an efficient disinfectant in a dilution of one part to one thousand parts of water. This is very effective in some cases but in those places containing much organic matter, such as the manure in stables, it is well nigh worthless unless the floors be thoroughly cleaned and scrubbed to free them of organic material as this agent causes the albumen to coagulate, thus rendering it inactive as a disinfectant of much value except in dairy or other barns having cement floors which can be thoroughly cleaned prior to its use. It must be remembered, however, that it is poisonous and also corrosive to all metals.

The coal tar products are very efficient if of the proper strength. They consist of carbolic acid and the various dips and disinfectants sold under a great variety of trade names. Carbolic acid or phenol is generally given a much higher position as a disinfectant than it deserves, but in 5 per cent. solution is fairly efficient although very expensive at the present time. The cresol solutions are supposed to be very efficient in 3 to 5 per cent. solutions and if the product used is a reliable one, manufactured by a reliable firm and guaranteed to come up to standard, it can be depended upon to produce satisfactory results. Coal tar disinfectants of good quality constitute the cheapest and most efficient disinfectants we have at our disposal. There is one strong objection to the too free use of coal tar disinfectants about the dairy and that is the penetrating odor possessed by them which is apt to be taken up by milk or other dairy products. It is, of course, safe to use disinfectants of this nature about the stable provided the milk is removed as soon as possible after milking. For example, coal tar dips and cresol compounds should not be used in the milk room or creamery.

Lime as a Disinfectant.

As a general disinfectant about the yards and stables, freshly burned lime should prove the standby of the dairy farmer. When purchasing lime for disinfecting purposes always buy stone or rock lime and keep it in an unslaked condition until used. Lime that has been entirely slaked in the air has no disinfecting powers and is not soluble in water. To be of value as a disinfectant the rock lime or quick lime must be slaked by the addition of a small quantity of water. This causes a small amount to be slaked causing the remainder to swell and break into a powder. Slaked in this way, lime exerts a powerful disinfecting action if used immediately after slaking. To secure the best results the water must be added in small quantities and the mass stirred to hasten the slaking. This material should be spread about the stable floors and can be advantageously mixed with the manure heap. Care should be taken lest too much heat be generated in the stable causing fire. In organic matter, as manure, it cannot be equaled and possesses the advantage of being beneficial to the soil to which the manure is eventually applied. For the disinfection of lots and yards it is both efficient and inexpensive and can be spread liberally upon the surface and cultivated into the soil. If it is desired to use a liquid in the stable, lime in the form of whitewash will prove efficient if properly applied. It should be freshly made by the addition of water to stone lime and applied as soon after preparation as possible while still hot. For this reason it should be made in small amounts at a time. Whitewash well applied serves the additional purpose of being an index of stable cleanliness. For disinfecting purposes whitewash is usually prepared by adding one gallon of water to five pounds of unslaked lime.

In practical disinfection it is of great importance that all litter and loose boards be removed before starting disinfection. The solutions used should be of the proper strength. Disinfection with a weak solution is worse than no disinfection at all, because it gives the owner a false sense of security, thus leading him to be more careless. On the other hand the most perfect disinfectant is of no use in unskilled hands; to be effective disinfection must be thorough. It is of no use to disinfect the walls of the stable and leave the stanchions untouched. It would likewise be a waste of time and energy to disinfect the stable and leave the manure in the gutters. To be thorough, disinfection should be carried out under the direction of an expert who has seen your stable and is otherwise familiar with your problem. The extensiveness to which disinfection should be practiced depends largely on the disease, the method of handling the cows, and the extent of the disease on the farm. All discharges of sick animals are usually infective and therefore must be destroyed.

MODES AND PERIODS OF INFECTION IN TUBERCULOSIS.

In a paper read before the Pan-American Scientific Congress and published in the journal of the American Medical Association Dr. Mazyck P. Ravenel reviews the experimental and clinical evidence bearing upon the questions: Does the tubercle bacillus enter the body through the respiratory tract or the digestive tract? and sets forth the present views with respect to them as definitely as the evidence permits. Concerning the first question he says: "Both routes of infection are universally recognized, and there remains to be determined now only their relative importance as portals of entry."

The fact that tuberculosis is so pre-eminently a disease of the lungs does not mean that the bacilli always enter the body by inhalation. Experiments have shown that when considerable fat is present in the food the bacilli may pass through the intestinal wall and be found in different parts of the body within a few hours after being taken into the stomach, without leaving a trace to show that they have passed through the intestinal wall. The disease often develops chiefly in the lungs even when experimental infections have been produced by inoculation or placing infected food in the stomach. It was these considerations that led Dr. Ravenel to remark that, "It is evident that infection of the lung is not the simple process of inhaling bacilli directly into the alveoli, as was formerly believed, but involves a more complicated mechanism."

Concerning the role of dust and spray in producing infection by inhalation the author remarks, "The relative danger of the two methods has not been determined. * * * The bacilli in the spray are certainly more apt to be alive and virulent. Both must be recognized as capable of producing infection, and droplet infection is probably the more dangerous."

Notwithstanding the efficiency of the filtration function of the nasal passages in keeping germs out of the trachea, it seems likely that the majority of cases of infection occur through the respiratory tract. The protection afforded by nasal filtration is lost in mouth breathing. Moreover germs lodged in the nasal passages may be swallowed and inhaled germs may thus enter the body through the stomach.

In his London address fourteen years ago Dr. Koch argued that all infections occur through the respiratory route and that there is rarely any danger of infection through food. Since that time numerous experiments have established beyond doubt the error of Koch's view. The bacillus of bovine origin, which is responsible for a large portion of the tuberculosis in children, enters through the digestive tract. One avenue through which infection may enter the body is the tonsil. Concerning this avenue Dr. Ravenel remarks, "The evidence that the tonsils are frequently the portal of entry for the tubercle bacillus appears to me very conclusive, and it seems equally certain that food is the bearer of infection in a large proportion of cases."

Turning to a consideration of the age at which infections occur Dr. Ravenel points out that infections most frequently occur in childhood, but that they may occur at any age. The inherent difficulties in solving this problem are great. In the absence of positive evidence there is wide-spread and growing opinion that infection nearly always takes place in infancy and childhood; but this is not wholly warranted by the evidence at hand, even though it does have a legitimate basis. The evidence shows that adult infection does occur though it appears to be much less frequent than infection during early life.

Dr. Ravenel sums up his paper in his conclusions which he gives as follows:

1. The evidence at hand indicates that in the majority of cases the respiratory tract is the route of infection in tuberculosis.
2. The alimentary tract is a frequent portal of entry for the tubercle bacillus.
3. The tubercle bacillus is able to pass through intact the mucous membrane of the alimentary tract without producing a lesion at the point of entrance. This takes place most readily during the digestion of fats.
4. The bacilli pass the chyle through the lacteals and thoracic duct into the blood, which conveys them to the lungs, where they are retained largely by the filtering action of the tissues.
5. Infection through the alimentary tract is especially frequent in children.
6. Infancy and childhood are pre-eminently the periods of life when the individual is susceptible to tuberculosis infection, and the majority of cases of infection occur during these early years.

7. Any campaign against tuberculosis which leaves out of consideration the protection of children against infection would fail of success.

8. Tuberculosis infection in adult life occurs, but not so frequently or readily as generally believed.

9. Tuberculosis infection may occur at any age.

CHANGES IN COLD STORAGE BUTTER.

Dr. A. C. Dyer, chemist of the Dairy Division, United States Department of Agriculture, has for the past two years made an exhaustive study of the various changes which take place in butter kept in cold storage for a considerable length of time and his research work has resulted in the same conclusions as the practical experience of creamery men.

The general belief that the deterioration of butter is due to bacterial development is not substantiated by the facts brought out by the studies made by Dr. Dyer. The following from the Journal of Agricultural Research contains some very interesting facts:

Bacteria Die, Not Multiply.

While a technical treatment of this subject of popular interest is not desirable the fact should be stated that the bacteria in butter held in storage not only do not flourish but die off rapidly. Butterfat as distinguished from the curd, salt and other non-fatty ingredients of butter, is an inert mass, chemically speaking, and undergoes no change in storage. Dr. Dyer has kept samples of pure butterfat in cold storage for two years, and found them as sweet and clean when they came out as when they went in. He has on the windowsill in his laboratory one of the samples of pure butterfat just referred to which was placed there after its two-year sojourn in cold storage. It has been standing in a tumbler over a year, open to the air and sunlight and subjected to room temperature during all this time. Some chemists have expressed doubt that butterfat kept under these conditions could be fit even for soap making.

The Old Idea of Rancidity.

The first conclusion of Dr. Dyer is that disagreeable odors and flavors in the stored butter are due to changes in the proteids contained in butter and not in the butterfat. In other words that something in the buttermilk contained in the butter after making is responsible for deterioration. Protein chemistry in this connection was unknown until the researches of Emil Fischer, about twenty years ago.

Upsets Some Chemical Theories.

Dr. Dyer has demonstrated that bad flavors are developed in cold storage butter by a chemical change expressed through a slow oxidation progressing in one or more of the non-fatty substances occurring in the buttermilk; they are not due to any oxidation of the fat itself. Moreover the extent of this chemical change is directly proportionate to the quantity of acid present in the cream from which the butter was prepared. Dr. Dyer upsets some chemical theories with his belief that olein, which constitutes 35 per cent of the non-volatile constituents of butterfat, is so difficult to oxidize that presumably it does not take up oxygen at all. The trouble, therefore must be looked for elsewhere.

What Causes Bad Flavors in Butter.

Without pursuing further the technical phase of the subject and even with some misgiving whether this little has been stated clearly and accurately, we can now get down to the practical results of Dr. Dyer's investigation in language that the man who butters his bread before eating it can understand. The buttermilk, then, supplies the substance which decomposes in cold storage, and this decomposition in turn is proportionate to the degree of acidity in the butter. If the acidity is high, decomposition is greater. The remedy of the buttermaker preparing butter for cold storage is, therefore, not to ripen the cream from which it is made to too high acidity, or, in case this has been done, to wash out the greater part of the buttermilk.

Fresh, good cream, arriving at the creamery has a very low degree of acidity and is known as sweet cream. This cream churned at once or after the addition of a starter to increase the acidity slightly, is known as "sweet cream butter." This butter has the best keeping qualities of any and all the navy butter is now made in this way. On the other hand "sour cream butter" is made by allowing the "starter to act on the cream until a comparatively high degree of acidity has been produced in the cream. Butter made in this manner has the high flavor demanded by the general trade. This butter while excellent for immediate consumption is the variety most prone to go "off flavor" if kept in storage. The buttermaker can make a butter that will not lose its flavor in cold storage, but the flavor of this butter will be delicate. The people can be guaranteed a sweet, delicately flavored butter at all times if they are willing to forego their taste for a stronger butter. If all butter could be marketed and placed on the table as soon as it is made, there would be no howl over bad flavors. Salt, of course, is necessary both as a flavor and to "keep" the butter. The unsalted butter which is served at many of the first class hotels is very high priced, not, however, because it is more expensive to make, but because it must be consumed immediately. In Europe unsalted butter is the rule. The United States goes to the other extreme both as to salt and as to flavor. Are our people willing to moderate their taste a little and then insist that the manufacturers shall give them butter that will keep?

INCREASING THE EGG CROP.

Albert Marple contributes the following to a recent issue of the Butter, Cheese and Egg Journal:

The poultrymen of Southern California have discovered a method of forcing "Biddy" to shell out two eggs per day instead of one. This statement sounds mythical, but nevertheless it is a fact. They are accomplishing this result by compelling the hens to work eighteen hours each day rather than to have them labor through only the ordinary eight hours. This new system certainly knocks the egg layers "union" in the head. How is this very desirable result obtained? The answer is very simple. A pair of electric wires is strung from chicken house to chicken house and incandescent globes are placed within the coops, one being placed in each pen which will illuminate that pen about as bright as the average room, care being exercised not to have the light too bright, as this excites the birds. This light is turned on by the time clock at from 3 to 5 o'clock in the morning according to the time of year. The result is that the hens "get up with the sun," believing that when the lights are turned on that daylight has arrived, and the result is that they scramble out of bed and begin their daily operation of making and laying eggs. Although this operation is very simple the largest and most responsible poultrymen in Southern California claim that it brings results and they give figures to prove their assertions.

The electric light method of hoodwinking the hens was started by C. H. Kline, of Burbank, Cal. One thousand hens were first experimented with and two weeks after starting it was found that a gain of 22 per cent in egg production had been made. Mr. Kline's method of raising poultry was found to be the ideal for this experiment. He has a number of houses, each of which is several hundred feet in length and each house is sectioned off into a number of smaller pens. Wires are strung along the roof of the long house and from these a drop cord lamp is hung in each coop. The time clock by which the lamps are automatically turned on is located in the main barn close to the house. The lights do not go on the same hour each night, but the hens are made accustomed to the lengthened hours gradually. For instance, in September, when the days begin to shorten, the lights are turned on at 5 o'clock and are started a half hour earlier each week until 3 o'clock has been reached, at which time they are started throughout the winter months. In each pen is a fountain of running water, dry feed and hopper feed. The extra amount of food consumed by the hens during the early hours assists in making possible this increase in egg production.

Shortly after the initial experiments the firm of Craig and Forsyth of the same town took up the novel system. The flock of this ranch was divided into two parts and a record was made of ages, condition and number in each section. A two-weeks' electric light experiment was made on one-half of the flock, with the result that the hens whose pens were lighted raised from an egg production of 600 eggs a day to 1,200 per day, and this occurred at the time when eggs were soaring around the 50-cents-a-dozen-wholesale price. This ranch uses the small house system, with possibly 100 chickens in each coop.

The poultrymen of Southern California claim that the cold storage egg market may be made a thing of the past by the new discovery. This novel system can control the egg market, for the production can be made to expend when the egg prices are highest and to slacken when the prices are low. This would also provide a more uniform price for eggs rather than permit them to be 25 cents per dozen one time of the year and 60 cents a dozen at another time.

Doubtless this forcing of the hens to greater egg production is a drain on the strength of the birds, but it is argued that while the birds are made to work overtime during the months when eggs are "high" they may be fed less egg-making food when the price of "egg fruit" is low.

MILK AS A FOOD.

Flora Rose contributes a lengthy article on "Milk as a Food" to a recent issue of Hoard's Dairyman from which the following paragraphs are reprinted:

The possibilities of healthful living are greater at the present time than ever before in the history of civilization. Science has applied itself to the task of showing us how we may overcome one after another of the conditions which are opposed to health. At the same time a penalty has been exacted, for with increased knowledge has come the responsibility for knowing.

The number of paths which branch from the straight road of right living to tempt the wayfarer have increased almost bewilderingly. The laws governing human welfare are not many nor are they too difficult for even a child to understand, but the way must be well marked. Nowhere do we find this better illustrated than in the matter of the daily diet. The array of foods which it is now possible for us to purchase at almost any season and in any locality has added greatly to the possibilities of a healthful diet and has served also to confuse the purchaser in the choice of a right diet. The only guide many persons have is the statement—too often misleading—of the manufacturer of the food.

To avoid the pitfalls of civilized diet and to profit by its really wholesome variety, the housekeeper—for she is the one having the dietary in hand—must acquire intelligence in the selection of food. Like the mariner, she must chart her sea and learn both rocks and reefs and safe ways. A close study of some common important food will serve to show one way of learning to select the dietary. No food will give better reward for close study than milk, since a careful consideration of its value as a food and the place it should occupy in the diet will bring to light some of the wonderful work which is now being done by the scientist to aid the housekeeper in selecting the family meals.

A Study of Milk.

Milk is a cheap food. Furthermore in any family dietary where the welfare of the children as well as adults is intelligently considered, it is almost a practical necessity.

The proof that milk is a cheap food is not the price paid for the quart, since even at fifteen or twenty cents a quart milk is a cheap source of nutritive substances always needed by the body, but particularly needed during the growth period.

Is Milk a Cheap Source of Energy?

The energy that a food may yield is measured in terms of the calorie. The greater the number of calories a digestible food will furnish for a given amount of money, the cheaper the food as a source of energy. If ten cents is to be spent and the particular need to be considered is the energy need, the problem is how to invest that ten cents in order to buy the most energy. Ten cents will buy the following amounts of energy in a few of our typical foods:

	Calories.
In milk at 10 cents a quart,	672.5
In milk at 8 cents a quart,	840.1
In round steak at 26 cents a pound,	271.0
In eggs at 35 cents a dozen,	234.0
In eggs at 55 cents a dozen,	153.0
In bread at 6 cents a loaf,	1713.5
In oatmeal at 5 cents a pound,	3601.5
In cornmeal at 4 cents a pound,	4037.0
In cheese at 25 cents a pound,	798.0
In butter at 50 cents a pound,	698.0
In butter at 40 cents a pound,	872.0

These figures quickly convince one that milk is not the cheapest source of energy that can be included in the dietary, although it compares more than favorably with meat and eggs; that a combination of milk and cereal makes a cheaper energy yielding meal than milk alone; that cereal alone is cheaper still.

Is Milk a Cheap Source of Building Material?

By "building material" is meant all that array of substances used by the body to build and keep its tissues in repair. Although none of these substances may be set aside as having greater or less importance than the others, some building materials undoubtedly play a more conspicuous part than others. A few of the most prominent ones, protein and such ash constituents as lime, phosphorus and iron, will be used as a basis for comparing milk with other foods as a source of building material.

The Cost of Protein in Milk.

Figures show that the amount of protein which various common foods will supply for the same amount of money may be seriously misleading. They should be accompanied by qualifying statements concerning the value of the protein from various sources. For example, ten cents will buy:

	Grams protein.
In milk at 8 cents a quart,	40.00
In milk at 10 cents a quart,	32.00
In cheese at 25 cents a pound,	52.26
In round steak at 26 cents a pound,	37.14
In eggs at 35 cents a dozen,	20.60
In eggs at 55 cents a dozen,	13.85

In dried lima beans at 10 cents a pound,	82.10
In white bread at 6 cents a loaf,	61.50
In corn meal at 4 cents a pound,	104.30
In oat meal at 5 cents a pound,	151.30

Exact data making it possible to say that this or that protein is twice or three times as valuable as another protein are scarce, but some comparative figures on the value of various proteins in animal feeding are available, which will illustrate the point sufficiently well to clear up the record of milk as a cheap source of protein.

Hoard's Dairymen gave the following table to show what percentage of various proteins eaten by pigs is used for building tissue:

20 per cent of wheat protein was used for building tissue.
25 per cent of oat proteins was used for building tissue.
40 per cent of wheat germ proteins was used for building tissue.
45 per cent of casein of milk was used for building tissue.
63 per cent of skimmilk proteins was used for building tissue.

In spite of the fact that these figures are not the result of experiments on human beings, it is still reasonable to conclude that they show that milk is a decidedly superior source of protein for general human consumption and that it is a particularly good source where growth is taking place; that the amount of protein required in the daily dietary may be less if milk or cheese form a considerable part of the diet than when foods such as the cereal foods are mainly depended upon; that milk is not an expensive source of protein.

Milk a Source of Phosphorus and Iron.

Milk is comparatively rich in phosphorus as well as lime and forms an important and cheap source of this valuable element. Milk is low in iron and when it forms any considerable part of the diet it should be associated with foods rich in iron. In spite of its low iron content, it is an important food to use when the blood is low in iron because lime in food is believed to increase the body's ability to utilize iron.

The writer sums up her article as follows:

With all the evidence in, no foods bear the investigation of nutritive properties better than milk products. It is impossible to escape the conviction that not only is milk a cheap food but it is a food whose value can hardly be estimated in terms of dollars and cents. It has been pointed out that:

1. Although milk is not the cheapest source of energy that can be bought, it is nevertheless an important source of energy, and that the energy yielding substances, the protein, the milk sugar, and the butterfat, all have special value.

2. Milk is a cheap source of protein because the protein that it contains is of a kind particularly valuable for building tissue.

3. The fat of milk has peculiar advantages over many fats because of its growth promoting properties.

4. Ordinarily milk is the cheapest and most valuable source of lime, unless it is discovered that lime in water can take the place of lime in milk.

5. Milk is a valuable and cheap source of phosphorus.

6. Milk is deficient in iron, but the iron that it contains is particularly well utilized.

7. Milk is the most important of the three foods, milk, eggs and meat, which are the chief sources of a factor in food that is soluble in fat, that is essential to growth and health, and that is called "fat soluble A."

8. Milk is one of the most important sources of a factor in foods soluble in water, that is essential to growth and health and that is called "water soluble B."
